

(Right between her fingers?)

Jenny: Yeah, and her sister was getting ready. She's already turning but the other childrens didn't know. And she got hold of one girl, I guess and kind of got hold of her and her fingernails were sharp. She said, "You're hurting me. You're hurting me. You're too rough!" She didn't say nothing. And then the third time she went in, well, she came running out and her hands were hairy. And she chased them and when she caught those children's, well, she hurts them cause she had long fingernails. And just at that time they ought to run to the camps and notify the people. Well, anyway, the fourth time she went in there and that's when she's gonna turn into a bear. And so her sister kind of just watch her, you know. Ready to go, ready to run for her life. Boy, when they said she came out running, she was a bear. Boy, they all got scared--screamed. Run to their camp but anyway--she'd catch them and just bite them right here and kill them.

Jenny: Yeah. And this girl, her sister, she ran all over and finally she found a place where a dog had little ones. And she ran in there. She ran in there and this Bear Girl, she even when she killed all the children--she killed them, went to the camp. And nobody to warn the camps and here she killed. Just went in tipi to tipi and killed everybody. I guess just a few of them got away. But they wasn't prepared. See, she just came all at once and she was mean, too. So nothing left after she done her job. Killed everybody. Just a few menfolks caught their horses, I guess, and run--run for their lives. But she killed all the children and women. Finally when she got through with her job killing all those Indians, well,
