

refer to now as a "spoiled child". If he wants anything, you got to get it for him.

(Why do you say they were a lot like hippies?)

Well, you know something about the hippies--How they originated, and whose idea it was. Well, Indians had that. Course that word, those hippies, they don't want to work. They go out, they want--Anything they want, they gonna get it. Well this ya'cégo, the same way. Like I said, "Take my shoes off." _____ "Put my shoes on me." Maybe you will, or maybe you won't. But, however, if you can't, I'll get by. And many other things like that. Hippies are that way.

(Were there very many of these ya'cégo?)

Yeah. Well, let me see now. That would be in society. Blue-bloods, as you call them--those millionaires. Their children get anything they want--Airplane, any kind of car they want. They go anywhere they want. That's a hippie. Where you take a regular child and they know how to without. They deprive themselves of lot of leisure and pleasure. And that corresponds with a hippie's life.

(Could you tell me the names of any Apaches that were in this category?)

Yeah. Just a few of them. Some of my folks--my father was that way. Yeah. Anywhere he sit down, they put a quilt for him. He sit down. And if he was going to get on a horse, they'd help him on. And where he's going to lay down, they'd fix a place. And in the morning when he get up they get a pan of water, and wash his face and give him a towel. He didn't have to do nothing. But he didn't like it. They tried to make one live that way. "Naw, cut it out. I don't want to live that way." That's what the hippies are today.

(Are there any of the young people today that you'd classify as this?)

Today?

(You said Henry Wetselline was the last one.)

That I know of. He had practically anything he wanted. Kiowas
