

to make him go. He jerked them lines, you know, hold him back and he kicked. "This mule won't go," he says. "He just won't go. So you'll have to loan me your hat." So the white man says, "All right, here." Give him his hat. "Get up." You know and he started to make him go. And the old mule rared back, you know. And so this Indian said, "You, you'll have to loan me your shoes." He says, "The mule won't go. I got to fix myself up like you are so he can go." "All right." Pulled off his shoes and he loaned it to the Indian Sainday. They tried to beat each other and now the Indian's already working on him. So he says, well, put on his shoes. And then, so, "All right. Jump on now. Go on, and hurry back." So he jumped on and said, "Giddy up." You know and this thing won't run. I mean he won't go, you know. So he kept pulling them lines, you know. "Aw, he won't go. You have to loan me your spurs so I could spur him." So he said, "Well, all right." So he took his spurs off and put them on the Indian Sainday. "All ready, so all right. Go on now." Oh, he spurred him and this old thing rared back, you know and he don't want to go. Well, he still don't want to go. "You'll have to loan me your coat." So he pulled off his coat and put it on him. "Well, all right, get on now and whip him, spur him." So he did. He got on and the old mule rared back again. No, he didn't want to go. So he says, "Well, this old mule, something's the matter with him. You'll have to loan me your vest." "All right." He took off his vest and give it to him. And he done it all that way. All the way--shirt and his gun. And he had it fix up so when he got the last thing, when he got the gun, I think, he jumped on. So he whipped the mule and the mule started loping. And he got so far and he said, "Hey,
