

said, "Well now, I come to find out who you are and now I've met you. I can cheat you," the white man says. So the Indian says, "All right." But he says, "I left my medicine. Well, you give me, loan me your mule." So he got all his clothes, shoes and gun and everything. And he jump on. He made out when he was getting all of that that the mule won't go cause he was an Indian. And this mule understood white man. So he said when he got on then no, he won't go and he kept on getting the clothes, hat and gun, shoes and everything. When he got all of that, he jumped on and he whipped him and boy, the mule jumped. And off they went. Got way over there and said, "Hey, white man, I'm an Indian." Now he says, "I'm not coming back. You can just stay there like that." He said, "I done beat you."

(Did you hear that when you were little, Jenny?)

Jenny: Yeah. It's been told way back there. That story's been coming generation through generation. I don't know when it started but it's an old story. All that Sainday is an old story. My grandmother and her grandmother, just generation to generation.

STORY ABOUT DEER COUNCIL

Cecil: The deer, you know, the deer. They had a council. Now this is a story too. We don't know whether it's really happened or not. But that's a story from way back there. The deers, they got off together somewhere and they had a council. They been killing them deers for meat. The menfolks and the women, they got tired of the Indians been killing their children, the little deers, you know. So they got together and when they got together, why, they had a council. They began to sing. And they all come together, the deers. And they all come together and then pretty soon the
