

give it to her. And somebody got it from her and they pawned it.
But I can't get it.

Jenny: They got it pawned.

(Why won't she give it to you?)

Cecil: Huh?

(Why won't she give it to you?)

Jenny: Well, this woman, his cousin (unintelligible). She shouldn't have done that. And he sure wanted it but she done give it away.

(What kind of bone was it made out of?)

Jenny: It was a cow bone.

Cecil: It's out of cow bone. But it's got--it's made like that. You see and then they put that blade on that and then they tie it with a buckskin. So it won't move either way and then they take that and scrape all that hide. Get it cleaned and you know, and then they put something on there.

DEER TOE BONES WERE USED AS PART OF SOME INDIAN GAMES

(Did the Kiowas ever use deer toe bones for making those games out of? You know, have you ever seen any of these toe bones of the deer that have little holes drilled through them and it's some kind of a little game they toss up and play?)

Jenny: (speaks Kiowa)

Cecil: Oh, yeah.

Jenny: They use them when they play hand game.

Cecil: And then they do that when they--that rock ball, stick game I call it. Stick game. Whenever we get into this, I'll have to make it--I've got the rock now. They make them out of bone, too but that's hard to make.

(Well, listen, I'd like to pay you for this.)
