

They just had it in for one another for years. And they was carrying guns for one another.

(Uh-huh.)

And I think Beard come out of the depot. Told George Dick, says, "Are you ready?" (Laughter)

(Hum)

And George said, "Yes, I'm ready." And they both grabbed for their guns and George beat him.

(That was down there at old Catale.)

Uh-huh. That took place right there in, close to the depot. I think Ray Beard was the depot agent.

(Yeah. Hum)

That's what an old grudge can come to. (Sentence not clear.) After the trial was over. They cleared George Dick, they cleared him because he just drewed his gun and beat Beard, killed him. Told him that's what you made out of it. What good made out of it.

(Yeah)

Course they said it could have been settled, get the right people would, get over and went to both of them. Got them to drop that thing. He just shot (not clear). Give one of them a cussing or something like that all it was about.

(Yeah)

That's what they claim it was. They were cussing one another. One of them called the other a name and the other didn't call. They just carried a grudge. If that could have been dug up before the killing and somebody done something about it why it would have saved the fellow.

(Right)
