

see very many timber or any kind of woods of any kind. It just looked just like it was just desert and the soil looked sandy.

(Well, it seems like to me now, that it seems like these Mormons were a pretty hardy people.)

They were.

(To stay down there--)

All the children was healthy looking and I noticed that we were lookin' at them that they were all healthy and the children were, all just had rosy cheeks. And we wondered how they--how they grew up to be so healthy lookin', the way the food they had been partaking of.

LIVING CONDITIONS WHILE VISITING IN MEXICO

(This place that you spent this time down there--you say you spent several weeks--how did this place that you said you--they gave you a house to stay in. How was this fixed? It wasn't just a plain house. What kind of a house was it?)

It was a stone house that they wanted us to live in the time we were there. And it wasn't furnished like a furnished house you would call--you had to make out just about as good as we could make out. And I don't remember of seeing any beds.

(It didn't have any beds? How about cooking? Did you have a fireplace to cook on?)

There was a fireplace in the living room. We had to get our wood and build fire and cook all meals by the fireplace.

(Seems to me--did you--did they have any kind of a little store there where you might purchase something to go along with what you brought along to eat?)

I 'magine they had a store there, but I didn't get to go to the store, or I didn't--there might have been a store there, I didn't remember if there was one.
