So, we stayed there, I just don't remember how long we stayed there in Yellowstone, but I remember well we camped there and went to different places--went to see the geyser go up and we also visit another place--hot spring. This hot spring, when you throw dirty handkerchief in, it come out a there clean. It was a little geyser. It blew up and came out of the water clean. And also there was other springs. There was real--kind of a black water boiling from the earth. We saw that in several places. It was kind of a scary place we thought. But we were there, so we stayed a few days. Then, we left.

So after we left, I just don't remember just what direction we went, but that was some exciting trip we had. I often wonder later how everything is, I imagine it is all improved and highways are better and all. I would like to go back the way we travel sometimes in later. While we were at LaPlunt's place, why, we finally--the lakes--the streams were so clear. That is what they were drinkin'--drinking water. And they also got their ice from the lake, the streams of the water in the winter time for their ice for the summer. They also kept it in the--they kept it in this sawdust. Regular ice house built to keep the ice. And as we come along, we come through Custer's battlefield. And it was something to see. Then, from there, I just can't recall which direction we came after we left, but I guess we come on.
