

Uh-huh, we went over there to eat dinner. We went on the train--
(From here, you went over there on the train?)

Uh-huh.

(From Hominy to Oma?)

That's when that was taken. I don't know this lady here. And I have pictures here of John Wilson (#6). As he goes by the Indians, they call him Moon on his nose (#7). They call him the Moon Head. He was the one that brought this here--

(I think that's the most of the picture that they have--)

This is the one. I couldn't tell the name because this picture is in the home. And I have another picture here of three young Indians. From surroundings, this picture had been taken in Washington, D.C. One of Indian happened to be my sister, Eva Penn (#7), and other Fred Lookout's daughter, Mary Lookout. And this other one his/her name was Mary Ware from Pawhuska. They had--make this trip to Washington D.C., with delegation. And I have a very nice picture of Mr. Andrew Penn (#8), which who originated from Hominy.

(This here was Katherine's uncle?)

Grandpa.

Oh, Albert. (Albert (#5))

Oh, Albert instead of Andrew. I don't know who this picture is. Then I have another picture here. These Indian are from Pawhuska (#9). Their names--oh my! I can't hardly think of their Indian--they have their Indian names and I can't hardly--it's a very nice picture of the Indian. They are well dressed in strange clothes. They have--seem to have moccasin and leggings on and beautiful bows which are, I guess they are in colors and Indian shirt, but I just can't remember their names.

(Do you know any off--who is kin to 'em?)

I think that's Josephine Pryor's mother, but I don't know their name. And
