

(Well, I guess that stampede would scare a white person. My goodness.)

They threw a cat out the window on the south side and they jumped up and screamed said, mad dog, mad dog, you know. And listen they like to killed some those girls.

(Why, I know they would.)

They didn't know what--

(Well, those Indian boys I guess could think of anything couldn't they?)

Well, some of them was bawling and blowing and those others caught on, you know. There's lot of 'em that was scared real bad. But these girls run towards her. (Laughter.)

(Yeah.)

They hollered, mad dog, mad dog, you know. And begin to--they wanted to alarm her up you know. And she just pleaded for her life. And those girls thought that was the funniest thing there ever was. Their brothers was just herding over everybody in the hall you see. They just fell on each other. Said it was a stampede. It was kind of bad in a way. They should have told everybody.

(Yeah, they should have.)

But they didn't and they just went wild you know.

SCHOOLS AND MISSIONS

(Mrs. Ross, was this your folks' allotment up in here?)

Yes.

(Well)

Yes, our allotments are here. This was Dad's.

(Yes.)

And we bought some land.

(Well, now, you're not very far from the Osage Nation, are you?)
