

I went over there and stayed all night. They had a boy about my age. And marshal come in there. Had a feller with him arrested--settin round before they got ready to go to bed. Great big fellow. He said give that man a bed. That marshall put a trace chain round his ankles and take couple of padlocks. on it.

(Yeah)

We come up there to see him go to bed. They got him upstairs. Pulled all his clothes off. Then marshall put a chain around that man's ankle and put a padlock on it and then put one on him. He couldn't get off.

(He wasn't going to get away. (laughter)

Flint: Padlocked together in that bed.

I thought it was the U.S. Marshal that was one here.

EARLY DAY DOCTORS

(Yeah. Who were your early day doctors, ma'am, in the community?)

Jenny: The oldest one they had here was Dr. James. He doctored with herbs.

What was James was your first doctor? Wasn't it, Doc James?

Flint: What?

Jenny: Wasn't old Doc James your first doctor? Doctored with garlic and all those herbs?

Flint: Dr. James and Dr. Christie. Yes.

(Uh-huh)

Jenny: Up here, well, the house along there somewhere where the Moores had their laundry, only faced out this way. And he grew garlic. And it hasn't been too many years they got that garlic killed out. When somebody built that house there that garlic just grew out there.
