

(What is she doing now?)

Bob: What's she doing now? Well, she's a--she's going around with an old boy--Charles Tail--that's got F. B., and just shacking up with him. She's probably got it, too, by now. And this boy right here (referring to another case)--I don't know if I told you about this one or not--he made his first major burglary when he was in the second grade. This is his letter here. He's done everything--broke into everything that had a lock on it, from that time on. And he finally went to training school at Helena for breaking into a building when he was a little older, and then when he got out and I started working up here, and he was a junior in high school. And I worked with him all that spring and got him ready to--he was wanting to get his education--so everything was going just real rosy and the last day of school--the last week of school--I went by and I asked his principal how things were going and he said, "Well, where's Shawnee?" I said, "I don't know." He'd been doing so well, and they were taking final tests. And I said, "I'll find him." And I started looking around and the old boy was in the city jail down there. And then they had to go to the mayor, and I said, "I'm not asking you to cut off one minute of his time. If he's done something wrong, let's let him make it up. Let me have him to take these final tests, and when school's out, come down here and lay it all out." And I got him in Upward Bound that summer. We'd only had--everybody can't get in Upward Bound--We only had six slots in whole Blaine County, and I had a hard time getting him in. But I got him in Upward Bound. Then that fall he came back to Geary and wanted to finish up his senior year here. But he picked up this rifle in a brawl down there--his mother's living with Anna Coker's rightful husband--he's been living with them down there and he shot him. He just lacked a quarter of an inch hitting his heart. Then they had to go to the Clinton Hospital and talk the old boy into not filing on this kid, and they kicked him out of school here and everybody was down on him, and then he had to fall back on J. R. Cookie (?) down here at Weatherford. J. R. took him in his own home down there. The
