

(They were the first ones here.)

HAS UNKIND FEELING FOR ENGLAND

And England has dabbled in every country in the world.

(Everyone.)

And they put a kind over the Ethiopians. There's history on this. I've got na-so-sgi. (?)

(Na-so-sgi. (??))

Na-so-sgi (?). Now he was a full blood Cherokee Indian. Great tall slim fellow. I can remember just--I can shut my eyes and look out there and see him. 'Cause he done a lot of talking to me when I was seven or eight, nine ten. He lived to be pretty old. He didn't know how old he was. And nobody else knew. But he was--he could show that he was really old. Because he lived in a little house out west of my old place. That I was raised at. Right across the highway over there is the little log house over there. He lived in that. And he would work for Granny Buzzard. He'd come over and he'd work for her. She'd pay him in lard and meat, flour meal. Things like that. Something for him to live on. Eat.

(Sure.)

And he was really white-headed. He begin to get stoop shoulders you know.

(Yeah.)

He showed his age. But he must have been ninety or over. When he was talking to me. Now he told me that he remembered when the Englishmen be a trading-- tried to use one of the victims. He traded for a slave. And he said they would point their hand out there. "Yeah I'll trade you this slave for that little piece of land." And they'd work that thumb. Back and forth like that.

(Well.)

See?

(Yeah.)
