

(But then it would be an old cemetery.)

In fact he must have died, say, back there about 18 -- , I think, oh could have been '70 -- 1870.

(Yes sir.)

Somewhere in there now. See they came down in 1867. He came down at that time and he died after that. 1866--67 couple years in there they's coming down here. Now that's when that cemetery, I think, he should have been one of the first ones buried there.

(Yes, sir.)

Of course, there's quite a few of 'em buried in that old grave there. All there is, all there is, just a little old marker on there. Made by someone. I don't even know who even made it. It's about that high. It just has "Captain Falleaf" on it. That's all the marker on his grave.

(Well.)

Of course, my Dad and my mother's father, of course, was in the army. His marker say "Colonel Jackson."

(Colonel Jackson.)

They called him Col. Jackson. I think that's the only name I ever knowed him by.

(And he was your.)

He was my grandfather. He married grandma, see, after my grandpa died well, he married her. See, that was in, he died in 1905, died in 1905.

(Now I found the Yellowbird cemetery, which is way back about ten, twelve miles back from the nearest settlement, in those hills over yonder. I was fortunate enough to get there in time a few years ago to get most of it recorded and then hunt people that knew something about the rest of it. But I would say in another ten years it will be completely gone,
