

outlaws surrender. The door was shut, and he kept on demanding they surrender. And seemed that this one gun went off. And the horse and rider fell at the same time. The rider was shot right between the forehead. And the horse was shot, too. Killed them right on the front steps. So the others over there, they'd stick their heads up and the others shoot over there, and they wounded one man over there. And they just made it so hot, none of them would stick their heads out. But they knew what was happening.

This man, the undersheriff went and run...there was a post standing there, in a circle of barbed wire. He run to the wire and the post for shelter. And he laid behind it like this. He'd stick his head out above the ground just to peek and see what happened. And he went back down. He had a hole right in the forehead.

They were sharp-shooters. And they kept shooting, but the posse didn't move. Hank Thomas told them not to go (attack) till later on, till they'd run out of ammunition. They just keep a shooting.

They was shooting into the building. They was shooting--posse shooting into the building and the outlaws were shooting at them.

Later on they took that sheriff's belt with the gun on it and the star as souvenirs. And then they went and got on their horses and went through the corn and into that creek...That creek that was going east towards Hog Creek. And the posse found out that they was quitting shooting. Someone stuck their head up and there was no shooting, so they got up. They all rode up there and they saw them going over the hill, so they took after them. They went there and found the sheriff and his badge was gone and his guns gone...they took it with them. So they took and brought body back.

And in the evening the posse come back to Anadarko and told what happened. We all got the story, how it happened. They wired to Guthrie and got bloodhounds. Put them on the trail. They trailed them as far as Cement and Cyril. Around Cyril.