

It was down on the river.

And they moved it. But I don't know where they moved it to.

(Well now there is one back up on the hill from the river now, that they call Hildebrand. And they're all Indians in it.)

Yeah, there's Roge and Jim and John and Joe.

(Yeah. Yeah, those are all in there. I've got that one recorded today.)

You did.

(And now there's several Chucolate there, too, and Downings, lots of Downings.)

Yeah, I imagined they moved that Hildebrand graveyard, put it up there.

(Well, it looks like they have moved it. The way it looks now. But there's only about half of the graves that have markers there.)

Yeah.

(All the rest of them are just, just have unmarked stones there.)

Yeah.

(So I've done as much as I could do on that one. And so I've made quite a big of progress.)

Hickory Grove or one or the other now. It's down there not too far from the other. Hickory Grove graveyard is still down there. I think they bury there yet.

(Yes ma'am.)

Lot of 'em bury where they want to.

(How long have you been here, Mrs. Cheater?)

I moved here in 1904.

(1904. Well, you've been here quite a while then, haven't you?)

Yes, I have.

(Where was your original home?)

Right down here about a mile and half north, to the northeast, on that Southwest City road.
