

hill, I run into lots of men like this. They say that many people were killed in them hills. Rocks. But nobody knows-- find the dead person--but nobody say anything about it.

(Well, these people that were killed, were there any Indians killed like that or were they white people?)

Once in a while, once in a while. But when the Indians were killed, then they report it at Ft. Sill, they supposed to go all over it. Well, now like I said, in these hills, sometimes the Indians or other times, white man, who claims or cowboys, break in. You run into horses, three men riding and you talk with them, "Anybody around here got horses to break? We're hunting a place to break some horses." It was their job breaking horses. "No." See, they pose as horse-breakers, and they may be outlaws. Some other tribes or individual Indians, the Indians were told to report all outlaws.

INDIANS AND OUTLAWS LEFT EACH OTHER ALONE

They did not bother to harm Indians as they wish not to be caught. Many times occupied empty Indian homes or hide out from the north country. They maybe robbing banks or kill somebody or something and come in here and hide out in them hills and few Indians begin to build homes but they don't live in them. They live in bunches or go in the Agency--those outlaws go in there (abandoned Indian houses). They sleep in there and hide in there. And all Indian children are told by their parents to watch out for outlaws, that they may get them or kill you as you play out on the creeks. They was to report to their folks. And the Indian children run all over the creeks in the mountains and everywhere. They run
