

into a lot of men but they don't bother about them. I am told by some Indians that sometimes these outlaws visit Indian homes or some arbors--they cook and eat. And they're hungry and they just help themselves to food and they don't bother Indians and the Indians sleep in the house. They cook their meals and somebody came out there and told them to just stay inside--they ain't bothering nobody. They just cooking and eating. So they get through eating and would leave and they would leave some money there on the table for the dishes. Pay for what they ate. That way the Indians would never report them. Maybe another time another bunch come, they just don't bother, just cook and eat, rest and they would go off in the morning they would get up and find some money on the table. They always would leave money on the table.

(Do you remember any of these guys yourself?)

Well, I'll tell you some of them. They just help themselves to food and leave money on the tables without harming anybody. They just go off.

GOVERNMENT BUILT HOUSES FOR INDIANS

You want to know about my experience with some of them? Before the country opened up, some of the Indians I said already had houses. The government issued lumber and if an Indian pay $50, the government would build them 2-room bunk house for them. If you pay $100, you get four rooms. Well, that money is to pay the carpenter, but the material is issued free. And that's the way they built their houses. Many box houses scattered all over the country. They have a contract--carpenter contract--building these Indian houses. They just build them bunk house and single room
