

(Yeah.)

Two big springs. It was right north of, you know where Johnsons lived?

(Yeah.)

Well its just about a mile northeast of him. Right up the creek.

(Well.)

Just follow that creek. Well I, really I haven't been up there in a few years. They tell me its all fenced up.

(I wonder if theres anything left of that old school.)

I don't think so. I was asking Buck about that not too long ago. You know, I haven't been up there in quite a few years. He said they had even made big ponds around that spring. Yeah that used to be quite a place. Big picnics ground out there. Used to have picnics all the time. Singing and the like.

CONCERNING-NEGRO SEMINARY

(I wonder how many kids went to school there at that colored seminary.)

Oh I don't know. I, they didn't have but about forty at a time.

(Yeah. Was that a brick building?)

Yeah.

(Well if it burned then it probably burned before statehood.)

I don't think it did cause it was going when--No I don't think don't so.

It was standing after statehood. I know it was.

(Yeah.)

I know when high school was going on at the old Cherokee seminary. It was going on then.

(Yeah, hmmm--)

Yeah, I remember we used to go up there to what they call the track and meet.

You know they were rivals. Yeah, that school was still going on long about the time before I was married.
