BOGLE, J. SACHEM. SECOND INTERVIEW

13882

Loudolphus D. Maybee,
Investigator,
May 2, 1938.

An Interview with Mr. J. Sachem Bogle,
Langley, Oklahoma.

Chief Squire, an Indian, and Jerry Thompson, a negro, were on their way home one evening and after passing the place where the Indians killed Harrison they stopped at his old place to get a drink at the well. After they got a drink they went on. Soon they saw a man milking a cow. Jerry Thompson liked warm milk so they decided to go over and get some. Chief Squire and Jerry Thompson both dropped their groceries, beans, coffee and flour and began to run in the opposite direction. Chief Squire was calling, "Come on, Jerry, I've done seen enough now." They both said they had seen a headless man milking the cow. For the years the people in that community told of seeing headless ghost and cow. The negroes, Indians and whites, alike, firmly believed in ghosts.
