

Today's Revolution in Weather

By WILLIAM J. BAXTER

Illustrated by Virgil Partch

Man has always that distant respect for the weather which he has for the woman he marries — she changes him without his knowing it, but he never dreams of changing her. He accepts it, makes adjustments to live with it and almost forgets it — until it suddenly changes its mind.

A handwritten signature in cursive script, reading "Edward Kessler", with a long horizontal flourish extending to the right.

1970

Published by

INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC RESEARCH BUREAU
68 WILLIAM STREET NEW YORK 5, N. Y.