Several hundred worthy students are attending the University of Oklahoma this year who would not be in school if it were not for the scholarships and fellowships provided by Alumni, Friends and Companies. Financial aid to promising students represents the most satisfying gift you can make to higher education. Gifts of any size are useful. Often the amount of a student’s fees, $132 for one year, will mean the difference between a student continuing his education or dropping out. Scholarships covering the total minimum expenses of a student are rare but sorely needed.

Money is accepted regularly by the University of Oklahoma Foundation for scholarships to be awarded by the faculty scholarship committee. If the donor wishes, he may specify the type of student he wishes to help and other conditions of the award.

It is estimated that throughout the nation only about half of the high school graduates capable of doing good college work are financially able to take advantage of the opportunity. So long as this is true, we are neglecting one of the most rewarding and surest ways of strengthening our democracy.

You can provide a scholarship or contribute towards one by mailing your check to the University of Oklahoma Foundation. Your government recognizes the value of such gifts by allowing generous tax deductions both to individuals and corporations alike.
