Oklahoma voters on Nov. 4 will pass on a constitutional amendment creating a new non-political board of regents for Oklahoma University, the A. & M. College and the secondary agricultural schools.

In the event of the amendment's adoption, the incoming governor will appoint the new regents. In whose hands will you place the future of these institutions?

Ira A. Hill, in his eight years of service in the State Senate, has stood solidly for measures designed to further the growth of the state educational institutions and remove them from political domination.

Votes for Hill for Governor on November 4 will be votes for progress in Oklahoma education.