Want to be a STAR, Engineer? Unfortunately, there are NO STARS in our business.

Few people ever know of any of the names of the men who build the most imposing edifices, much less unglamorous warehouses.

Nevertheless, the building business and engineering is an important, interesting and satisfying profession and we congratulate you for choosing this life's work. Stick with it — it has many rewards. Men who have been with Manhattan for many years enjoy returning to Norman and other cities and towns throughout an eight-state area to see the various buildings and military or industrial installations they had a part in erecting.

Manhattan has been a leader in virtually every field of construction for forty-five years. We built the Business Administration Building, the Biological Science Building, the Women's Quadrangle, Men's Quadrangle and the additions to Memorial Student Union on the University campus as well as several projects at Central State Hospital in Norman alone.
