TO THE GRADUATES OF THE UNIVERSITY OF OKLAHOMA

My greetings and felicitations are extended to you. No matter who you may be, nor the manner in which you have been enabled to maintain yourself during the years just past, your lot has not been an easy one. You have attained heights that money cannot buy nor lack of it preclude under our present system of education. Under the standards of our university and its management only labor and merits could bring to you this honor.

Tomorrow you become citizens, sharing both the joy, prosperity, adversities and responsibilities of those now occupying such places in our state, of which we are all proud. That you will exercise these privileges and duties creditably there is no doubt. Too many have gone before you from the same great institution, who have left the impress of their ability and learning upon the pages of our history, to leave room for question.

We welcome you into the ranks, for the student of today will be the leader of tomorrow. Some will rise to riches and fame, others may content themselves with hard labor, unmindful of glory for the benefit of their fellowman—but whatever the choice each may make—let him not cease to seek wisdom, nor shirk the responsibilities of citizenship, for wisdom softens the pangs of poverty and adds lustre to the crown of riches, and no man, however wise or great, can be of full value to his country who does not take interest in its conduct and affairs.

My best wishes for the success of each of you in your chosen field.

Sincerely yours,
M. E. Trapp
