in this issue...

Leading off this issue is an analysis of why higher education finds itself in its present state. Written by Dr. Thomas E. Broce, executive assistant to Dr. Mc- Carter, "End of the Honeymoon" is no dry technical appraisal. You may not agree with Broce's views, but it is good reading for those interested in the future of this university and others.

As promised there's the interview with Steve Owens, now an old pro after his rookie year when the Lions came so close to winning their division championship. The interview is a retrospective look at student athletic programs, the rookie system and sports at OU.

Also inside is a short feature on Peter MacDonald, OU alumnus and recently elected chairman of the Navajo Nation.

In the next issue we'll examine the fraternity and sorority system including an interview with the current leaders of the IFC and Panhellenic.—CBR

Cover—The three new buildings that have created diversion for sidewalk superintendents, frustration for drivers and chilblains for workmen are nearing completion. The Goddard Student Health Center will open after spring break to be followed in the near future by the museum and art school portions of the Fine Arts Center and the towering first unit of the Physical Sciences Center.
