CONTENTS

2 TRACKING THE CHOCTAW LIGHTHESEOMEN
When novelist Eve Sandstrom visited the Western History Collections in search of a hero for a new mystery series, she found much more than she had bargained for—a treasure-trove of information and a service-minded professional staff.

10 HAROLD AND MOLLY
Harold Keith was resting comfortably on his laurels—until he met Molly Griffis, a whirlwind publisher determined to reintroduce his books to a new generation of readers. So at age 90, he has been “discovered”—and he’s loving every minute of it.

15 FOR SERVICES RENDERED
High point of the academic year for faculty of the University of Oklahoma is the announcement of the new Distinguished Professors—those receiving lifetime appointments as George Lynn Cross Research, David Ross Boyd and Regents’ honorees.

20 HOW TO JUDGE ART
So art appreciation wasn’t required when you were in college—and as a result, you don’t know much about art, you just know what you like. An art historian uses the works of four masters to offer some pointers for those who would like to know more.

27 THE BATTLE FOR PLANET EARTH
Vitt and Caldwell, OU’s husband-and-wife herpetology research team, emerged from the tropical rain forests convinced that overpopulation and disregard for ecosystems are shortening the lease human beings have on the planet they call home.

31 SOONER SPOTLIGHT • ROBERT GRISWOLD
No matter what you may read in the popular press, most American men still want to be good fathers. It’s just that the question of what society wants and expects from fathers has changed more rapidly than the men who must play the role.

Prologue • Inside Front Cover
Sooner Snapshot • Inside Back Cover

ONTHE COVER
University art historian/ critic Victor Koskvin-Youritzin, shown here in the Fred Jones Jr. Memorial Museum of Art with a Joseph Glasco painting he likes very much, has specific reasons for separating “good art” from the other kind. “How to Judge Art,” Page 20.