A Bank's Job in Wartime

During the past few months, this bank has made a sincere effort to adjust its organization and its services to meet the needs of the emergency.

Ordinary, everyday facilities for deposit, withdrawal, exchange, collecting, lending, investing and safekeeping are now more important than in normal times. But, of special importance are those activities directly connected with the war effort.

A special department has been created for the sale of War Savings Bonds and Stamps. Loans are being made for Government projects and to finance manufacturers engaged in war production. Credit is being extended to farmers to aid them in reaching their food production goals. We are doing what we can to help side-track price conditions which lead to inflation.

In every possible way this institution is attempting to demonstrate how banking supports the democratic system of free enterprise and what a bank can do to help win the war.

(Economic planning to make the wartime problem of a physically distant and undesirable is more likely to prevail than the political integration methods, John A. Griswold, chairman of the University's department of finance, said.

He proposed that after the war an American "World Production Board" control reconstruction of devastated industrial areas by apportioning American machinery and raw materials on a basis of comparative advantage—the principle of having each producing area specialize in the economic goods which it is best fitted to produce. Mr. Griswold suggested that after such industries were once established and operating, the board could go out of existence and give free play to individual initiative and enterprise.
