A controversial subject often discussed by college educators and students alike is the value of participation in extra-curricular activities and the amount of time which should be devoted to them. Almost every student intermittently sets aside his books for activities to break the monotony of daily classes and study periods. The Sooner Magazine discovered what several alumni think about this issue, and their opinions (from telephone interviews) appear on the following pages of the Roll Call section.

WHITLOCK—I think each individual has to devise for himself what extra-curricular activities he wants to have. A well-rounded program is necessary for any young man or woman in college. The people who are members of fraternities or sororities can, through those organizations alone, acquire a basis of worthwhile activities without harming their study habits. If a university is doing its job, a student naturally is going to look around and seek extra activities in those areas that interest him. ... I was a fraternity man and also was engaged in activities oriented to my field of study, such as editor of the school newspaper and a participant in several college professional groups. I believe extra activities are a vital part of the development of a student's personality. Of course, this can be carried to excess, but then it is up to the individual to accept counseling from his instructors and parents and older students he is associated with. ... The degree of participation in activities is the responsibility of the student.

MRS. WHITE—Taking part in extra-curricular activities can be overdone. However, I do think that they play a big part in contributing to a student’s well-being, particularly if the student is away from home for the first time... Extra-curricular activities can have a lot to do with helping develop a student’s personality. Participation in these activities gives a person a way to face the outside world once he gets into it, and it equips him for a more confident part in adult education... But, as I said before, some people seem to carry these activities too far, and being overactive sometimes reflects on their grades... When I was at O.U., I commuted from Oklahoma City and had very little time for outside activities—and I regretted it... As long as activities do not interfere with grades, they are valuable. Through these activities, a student should be allowed to develop and make his own decisions before he is completely finished with school.

What part should extra-curricular activities play in college life?

PAT JARRATT JR., '47bs
Spencer Chemical Company superintendent
Vicksburg, Mississippi

JARRATT—Two years in a social fraternity was about the extent of my extra-curricular activities while at O.U. My education was interrupted by the service, and when I returned to school I was married, so my outside activities were very few . . . But if I interviewed someone for a job in this company, I would place quite a bit of emphasis on how active he had been. I would favor a person who had more activities than myself. I believe it is a part of a college education for one to gain experience in this type of thing . . . College activities are similar to civic activities. Once a person leaves college and settles in a community, his public image depends to a large extent on how good a neighbor he is and what kind of service he can do for his community . . . I believe that activities inside and outside of school should pretty well parallel each other. When I was in school there was a good ratio of activities to studies—and there should be.

NEW BOOKS from Sooners and the University Press

AMERICAN DRAMA
By Louis Broussard (University of Oklahoma Press)

Broussard's compact volume is an attempt to explain the unifying effect of modern allegorical theme on American drama and its playwrights—from Eugene O'Neill to Tennessee Williams. It tells of the theater's contribution to understanding the puzzle of human existence and explains why American drama is the best medium for revealing contemporary conflicts and goals.

The pursuits of O'Neill, Elmer Rice, John Howard Lawson, Philip Barry, T. S. Eliot, Thornton Wilder, Archibald MacLeish and Williams are vividly combined in these 130 pages, and their views are bolstered by a mixture of play excerpts and Broussard's notes. The result is a worthy reference for all drama enthusiasts—even the casual playgoer.

MISSOURI: A HISTORY OF THE CROSSROADS STATE
By Edwin C. McReynolds (University of Oklahoma Press)

The author of a number of creditable books, including Oklahoma: A History of the Sooner State and The Seminoles (both published by the University of Oklahoma Press), McReynolds, '22ba, '26ma, '45ph.d, O.U. professor emeritus of history, now embarks on a long and colorful narrative of his native state.

From exploration and early settlement days through the Harry Truman era and the politics and society of today, the story is unraveled in terms of rivers, cities and men who built a state which became the staging area for the great move to the West.

DUBLIN IN THE AGE OF WILLIAM BUTLER YEATS AND JAMES JOYCE
By Richard M. Kain (University of Oklahoma Press)

Dublin, center of literary accomplishments and a struggle for independence, is Kain's subject for the seventh volume of The Centers of Civilization Series. The lively spirit of the Irish, in both serious and humorous form, is discussed through the personalities, politics and literature of twentieth-century Dublin.

In his narrative, the author has lost nothing of the color and excitement that are inherent in this period of Irish history. Explaining historical events in the light of their literary and cultural significance, Kain has fulfilled the purpose of the Centers of Civilization Series—to summarize the influence of the world's great cities on the civilizations in which they existed.

AMERICAN PANORAMA
By Mary J. Brown (Exposition Press)

Professor Brown, '29ph.d, shares the highlights of her extensive travels with this armchair tour of the United States. Using her own experiences as a guidebook, the author gives her readers a glimpse of historical landmarks, important cities and the wonders of nature in each state.

Her Sooner State chapter is comprised of what she calls "outstanding memories" of trips through Oklahoma; she concludes: "Its people claim that they invented supermarkets, shopping carts, parking meters and chewing gum."

BEFORE MY NIGHT
By David Randolph Milsten (Exposition Press)

This unique collection of lyric verses ranges in subject matter from colorful personalities to inanimate objects in expressing the author's moods and experiences. Milsten, '25ba, '28Law, a Tulsa attorney, also is a biographer of Will Rogers, and one of the selections in this book, "Howdy Folks," has been adopted by the Oklahoma legislature as the official poem of the Will Rogers Memorial Museum.

MODERN ALGEBRA, SECOND COURSE
By Richard E. Johnson, Lona Lee Lendsey, William E. Slesnick and Grace E. Bates (Addison-Wesley)

This textbook is the sequel to an earlier edition by three of the authors, including Alumnus Slesnick, '46ba, on beginning algebra. It is assumed in this course that the student is acquainted with the language of algebra and its elementary rules and number expressions. The first ten chapters are concerned with complex algebraic systems, and the last four provide material for classes of above-average students and for independent study by individual students.
