Father of Human Genetics

New Year’s and lasted until last June. Snyder taught genetics at the island’s university, and he returned mighty pleased with the experience: his students—Chinese, Japanese, Korean and Okinawan, plus, of course, Hawaiian—were serious about Snyder’s specialty. Too, he managed to move about enough among the islands to get in about 40 public lectures.

But Snyder apparently never feels he’s quite as busy as he could be, so he and Mrs. Snyder put their minds and hands to work at a new trade in their spare time. Interested in Hawaiian jewelry, they collected dozens of varieties of lustered palm seeds, then learned to sandpaper them into fine necklaces, as the islanders do. One specimen took 100 hours for the two to complete, and it’s valued at $100.

How did Snyder happen to become a world leader in human genetics? It all began about 35 years ago when he was a college student. Having become fascinated by the study of blood groups, he went on to write his doctoral dissertation on the subject while at Harvard. This led to another book, Blood Groups in Clinical and Legal Medicine. It was the first work of its kind to be brought out in English, and following publication the American Medical Association packed its author off to the Royal Dutch Academy of Science so that he could reveal his findings to that group in person.

Snyder plunged into research. Through the years he became a veritable scientific detective, tracing racial distribution of blood groups, questioning the inheritance of human diseases, tracking down taste deficiencies and linking them to the individual’s genetic makeup. He devised new methods of studying genetics, then laid out practical methods on trait information for families. The basis for genetic counseling throughout the world is the work of Snyder, as is the practical application of heredity in the prevention of disease. Some of his work was done at Oak Ridge in the way of nuclear studies.

Countless students pored over the elementary genetics textbook written by Snyder some 30 years ago. Besides being one of the first written in English, it’s still the best used of any elementary work in the field. Also, Snyder organized the first genetics class in this country to be required of medical students, and he or his students originated every course being taught here.

He was chairman of Ohio State University’s department of zoology and entomology before joining O.U. in 1947. Besides heading the Graduate College at Oklahoma, he is professor of zoology and medical genetics and director of organized research as well. A man of his stature holds many honors and offices, and Snyder’s are almost too numerous to enumerate. He has been president of the American Society of Human Genetics and is now editor-in-chief of its journal. He is a member of the editorial boards of three other publications. One can count at least nine different fraternities to which he belongs, and he’s been president, vice president, director or a distinguished member of at least ten other major scientific organizations.

There is no saying just which of his many honors has been tops; certainly he would be too considerate of all organizations recognizing him to ever choose a “tops.” Still, friends of his took special note of his selection, in 1953, as honorary president of Phi Sigma, international biological society, for the office is reserved for the scholar considered by the group to be America’s outstanding biologist. Just as mentionable is the occasion when, in the closing days of 1955, the American Association for the Advancement of Science named him president-elect, which meant that he’d serve in three major presidential offices.

An appreciation of the Dean’s role in science hasn’t stopped colleagues and students from terming him a “real character” to boot. Snyder is anything but staid. He has a remarkable sense of humor and keen wit, something most persons coming into contact with him realize right off the bat. Yet the clincher comes when Snyder just happens to spot a convenient, unoccupied piano in the room. Seating himself at the instrument, he flexes his fingers for an instant, then drops them to the keys. For the next few minutes, you’ll be hearing eight-to-the-bar boogie woogie.

lowed Tompkins to enter the archives.

In 1940 Tompkins' book Russia Through the Ages was published. Two later works, Alaska: Promyshlennik and Sourdough and The Russian Mind were published by the University of Oklahoma Press.

A careful, patient man, he keeps one eye cocked toward the sky ("Yes, I'm a bird watcher"), but just try and get him to talk about his hobby; he'd rather talk about history. In fact, retirement from O. U. simply means more discussion of history for him, for he's returned to the University of Toronto as a Special Lecturer.

The fifth man, Lowry Doran, had rather use his retirement for writing about government. Political parties and state government constitute his preferred field, but 40 years ago he was planning something different.

"I started into law," he said, "but after one year I switched to political science. I concluded that my mind was better adapted to it than to the technicalities of the other field."

Doran taught high school in his home town of Springfield, Missouri, before pushing on to the University of Chicago for his doctorate. For two years, then, he taught at the University of Maine, and for another at State Teachers College in Tennessee.

Along about this time he decided to take a year off for cultural purposes and fun. I'd taught courses in history for awhile," he explained, "and I wanted to see the places I'd been talking about."

In all he saw about 40 countries in Europe, North Africa and Southwestern Asia. Particularly catching his fancy were the cities of Istanbul, Rome, Jerusalem and Athens. However, the celebrated spots soon were just as far away as previously they had been, and Doran came to O. U., an Assistant Professor of Government. In the 26 years which followed, he taught an estimated 8,000 students, and he watched the collegiate type change with the calendar.

"For example," he said, "years ago students would sometimes have fights right in the classroom; it doesn't happen today. Or a cow would mysteriously turn up in a professor's room, or a buggy on top of a building. Today there's not quite so much horseplay. Extra-curricular activities are a little more refined."

Has the teaching of government become easier through the years?

"No," said Doran. "In Oklahoma the teaching of government hasn't been properly enough emphasized in high schools. But it depends a great deal on the student, too. A lot of girls and boys don't read the newspapers. An interest in current news would help."

Current events, incidentally, claim a portion of each of Doran's days. Visitors to his office remember high stacks of newspapers and journals in the corners, and the head of the department used to joke with Doran about his reading matter constituting a hazard to the passersby.

Today Doran and his four retiring colleagues have more time for the newspapers. More birds will be watched, more trains boarded, more long- overdue books written. They have reached it, seems, what Bertrand Russell called "the last product of civilization": the filling of leisure intelligently.
