This month the Sooners Magazine is launching a new Roll Call feature which will bring you the opinions of your classmates (taken from taped telephone interviews) on subjects of interest to alumni. The remarks of the first five Sooners, chosen at random from alumni files, appear on the following pages. They were asked to comment on the issue of selective admissions at O.U. (See the "Backlog" in September's Sooners.)

We asked Hutto '10

whether O.U. should adopt some form of selective admissions

HUTTO—'I've been advocating for some years that there ought to be [some form of entrance examination]. In the first place, they ought to tighten up on those high schools and make 'em prepare these kids for college. If they aren't prepared when they get to college, they ought to be sent back to high school or a junior college where they can be prepared...Certainly, I'm in favor of the University's request. I've discussed it with Dr. Cross, and I even discussed it with Dr. Bizzell when he was president...and he was of the same opinion that something had to be done to take care of this increasing enrolment at the University and eliminate those who are not prepared to enter the University...It's a lot of extra burden on the University and its appropriations...The whole thing gets back to the erroneous attitude the public has about education as a whole...Beginning with the high school, too many of these youngsters are just on a holiday and they think when they come to the University, it's going to be a continued holiday...Well, I can remember...25 or 30 years ago...a diploma from high school just automatically admitted him to the University. That was, as I tell you, 25 or 30 years ago, and of course there's been a lot of agitation ever since from the University...particularly concerned with the expense involved in taking the teachers' time to prepare these students to get what they call remedial studies—they have to assign teaching staffs for that—and that costs money.'
1940-46

We asked Blackstock '50 whether O.U. should adopt some form of selective admissions

BLACKSTOCK—Oh, I think it's inevitable that we'll have to put in some form of entrance examination restrictions... If we continue this method of just opening the gates and letting everyone in, it's going to continue to flood the campus, which is already short of facilities and qualified instructors... There are many other places for these people. It has another very good facet... it would eliminate the inevitable disappointment of flunking out later... I don't see how the fair-minded person could look at it otherwise... Frankly, I think it would be a good thing to take some of the country club aspect away from the University, which I think has been growing down there a little too much... You know, for years we've had this group of people who come down for the purpose of having a good time and taking the course of least resistance... They don't help themselves greatly, nor do they help the University at all... I think we ought to have another school strictly for country clubbers and leave the University as a place to study.

We asked Thomason '36 whether O. U. should adopt some form of selective admissions

THOMASON—I spent many years in school work and in college administration in the State of Oklahoma before getting into industry. I'm still connected with education . . . namely education in industry . . . and I have some ideas, though I know I may be out of step with some of the so-called progressive thinking that's current now . . . Many have the idea that we have a responsibility at an institution to take any younger regardless of who he is and carry him as far as we can without having any standards to be met. Now I can't accept that premise. I think that it is not only bad for the institution, but it's a drain on the taxpayers . . . to open the gates to anybody just because he has a high school diploma. I'm very much in accord with screening and I don't think that the upper three-fourths [of the high school graduating class] is in any way unreasonable, nor do I think that the upper half for out-of-staters is unreasonable . . . I am in full accord with the recommendation being made by the University to limit its enrolment—not for the purpose of keeping youngsters out of school—but for the purpose of doing a better job for those we do accept in our institution . . . and providing our instructors with an opportunity to move along those with ability as fast as possible.

2-2 against New York.) It's a funny thing, but the teams that gave me the most trouble were Washington and Los Angeles."

Schwall thinks the Tigers will be contenders again next year and also predicts an improvement in the Boston team. "We're a young club and the added year of experience is sure to help. I can't say how I'll do. I don't think there's anything to the 'sophomore jinx' that people talk about. It'll be harder for me since the hitters will have had a year to look me over, but I will have had a year, too."

Schwall is high in his praise of the Boston fans and Red Sox manager Mike Higgins. "The fans there are great. They're extremely loyal, and they took me under their wing. They couldn't have been nicer. Higgins is a patient, intelligent baseball man—a good man to play for."

Higgins has also had some nice things to say about his prize kid. "Any time you bring up a kid who pitches the way Schwall does, you have to think things are turning for the better. The kid is great. I thought he was pretty good this spring, but he's better than I thought. He makes the game look easy."

Schwall has a heavy calendar of banquets and appearances scheduled before he leaves Oklahoma for spring training in February. "I hope I can get some rest sometime. I've been working out a little and I intend to keep it up until I report. At any rate, it's good to be back in Oklahoma. I like the East, but Oklahoma is my favorite spot. The people here are friendlier than any place I have lived. I hope to live here when I'm through with baseball."

But the way Don Schwall plays baseball, that time should be far in the future.

We asked Bogart '36 whether O.U. should adopt some form of selective admissions

BOGART—I certainly don't think that the plan that [the University] has indicated is strenuous. It seems to me that there should be some program to enable you to say that not just everybody can get in . . . It's a shame to have so many come down there and then not make the grade . . . Has anybody ever made a study as to what per cent of those in the 25 per cent bracket [of their high school graduating class] fail to make it their freshman year? It would give you something to go on . . . Is it indicated that those who did make real fine grades in high school also make real fine grades in college? . . . We have all found out that those that made the real top flight grades in college do not necessarily make the best businessmen or make the most successful businessmen . . . I have a son there in the University and, of course, I'm highly interested in it. I was the first alumni president we had in Tulsa and I have just finished writing about 20 letters for the ADF trying to raise money. I love the institution and graduated in law down there . . . I think your plan makes a lot of sense, but I'd have to give any other suggestions some thought . . . I believe that I definitely would be in favor of some sort of [restricted enrolment]. I think you might by and large be doing the students a real fine favor . . . You take your larger universities—Stanford and Princeton, Harvard, Yale, Dartmouth, all those—they have pretty strenuous [entrance] examinations. They don't look only at grades. They look at a lot of other things. On an entrance examination, you can get a lot more than just grades that would be of tremendous value.
Golden Days Photo ID for September

Several people were quick to identify September’s “Golden Days” photo as James Thompson from Pauls Valley. However, Rex O. Morrison, ‘39m.ed, superintendent of schools at Ada, was the first to come through with the name of the O.U. football letterman of 1921 and 1922. Thompson, a guard, was known as “Congressman” because of his election to the State House of Representatives from Garvin County, while still playing football for O.U. Although he lettered in 1921 and 1922, he failed to letter in 1923 because of a bad knee injury. Following close behind in identifying Thompson were Dr. W. W. Sanger, ‘29bs, ‘31med, Oklahoma City; Clarence M. Sale, ‘24ba, Dallas, Texas; W. D. Gibson, ‘29, Larchmont, New York, and R. C. Bowles, ‘24geol, Houston, Texas.
