ROLL CALL of alumni newsmakers

Conversation Piece

Much of the progress of the businesses and professions of Oklahoma and surrounding states depends on the calibre of the graduates of the colleges and universities. This month’s question, Do you feel that O.U. is producing the type graduate needed in your field? was asked of five Sooners who are in a position to know. Their answers, taken from taped telephone interviews, appear on the following pages of the Roll Call section.
Roll Call:

news events in the lives of Sooner alumni

1908-23
Dr. P. L. Hays, '14med, retired superintendent of Eastern State Hospital, Vinita, has established a private practice of psychiatry in Vinita. Dr. Hays, who retired in September, joined Eastern State Hospital in 1915 as assistant medical superintendent and became superintendent in 1915.

Paul Campbell, '21ba, '25ma, and Mrs. Campbell (Alma Douthit, '20) are living in Gaffney, South Carolina, where Campbell is teaching history at Limestone College. Mrs. Campbell has recently retired after 17 years with the Michigan social welfare service.

R. W. "Chuck" Dozier, '21ba, and R. William Dozier, Jr., '53ba, recently announced the formation of the Dozier Company, Oklahoma City. They specialize in life insurance audits, analysis of estate plans, business life insurance and pension and profit sharing plans.

Dr. W. O. Armstrong, '22ba, '24med, Ponca City, retired September 30 as medical director for Continental Oil Company. Dr. Armstrong, organizer and developer of Continental's medical program, had been Conoco medical director for 32 years. He is presently engaged in private practice at Ponca City.

DEATHS: William Leach, '08ba, '15ma, a retired Oklahoma educator, died November 10 in Norman Municipal Hospital. Leach had taught in Willows View School near Lexington, and served as principal in several Norman and Oklahoma City schools. He was one of the founders of the church school at St. Mark's Church for the children of Washington School and South Town, Oklahoma City. Survivors include three sisters, Elsie and Naomi Leach of the home, and Mrs. James B. Whister, McAlester, Texas, and a brother, Garfield Leach, Norman.

Bradley F. Thompson, '23eng, industrial sales supervisor for Public Service Company, Tulsa, died September 20 in Mobile, Alabama. Thompson had been with the Public Service Company since 1924. He was president of the Petroleum Electric Power Association and an officer in the petroleum section of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Judy Thompson, both of Oklahoma City, and his parents, Tulsa.

Do you feel that O.U. is producing the type graduate needed in your field?

EARL H. HOLDEN, '39ba
vice president
Republic National Bank of Dallas

HOLDEN—My answer would be in the affirmative based upon the last two years. We have taken three recent graduates from O.U. to come with us here in our training program. The results with them have been exceedingly gratifying. They have all turned out to be, so far, very high calibre young men. I'm a little bit more removed from the situation than most of the people there nearer the school, and that is the only direct contact I've had with any of these recent graduates within the last seven or eight years. But from talking with the three that we have taken on in the last two years, the progress that they've made, the attitude that they have, the background that they've reflected, we've been extremely satisfied with them... These three men [are] in two training classes which total 19 and represent six or seven schools all together. All of the others were Southwest Conference school graduates except for one—there was a boy from Kansas... The three from Oklahoma are better than average... at the top of this group of 19. Now that just may be an unusual circumstance, I don't know, but for that reason we have been very pleased with them. They were all business majors.
from Oklahoma City University and had worked in Kappa Kappa Iota, professional education fraternity. At the time of her retirement in 1947 she was a member of Deaconess Hospital, Oklahoma City. Mrs. Oklahoma City school administrator, died October 11 in an automobile accident ... the O.U. Student Bar Association. His address was 117 E. Comanche, Norman.

GILBERT L. ROBINSON, '28ba, '38ma director of personnel Oklahoma City school system

ROBINSON— I attended summer sessions continuously from '26 to '31 and received a bachelor's and a master's degree in history and also ... took some education courses and observed the people who were majoring in education in those days. Of course, they were turning out a good product then, but as I see it today, the product is so superior to what we turned out 20 and 30 years ago down there that there isn't any comparison. I interview each year, conservatively, no fewer than 2,000 new people, and we employ about 300 of them. We talk to some very bright young and middle aged people who apply here from all parts of the country, and it's my firm belief that we're doing as good a job, not only at O.U. but also at other schools in this state, as you'll find in any other state in the union. I'm not posing as an expert, please remember that. I have just had a good deal of experience in this field in the last 10 1/2 years, and I've been in this school game for 35 years ... The thing that pleases me is this: I see many young people now who have a pretty good cultural background. They're not just steeped in the academic fields, but they have broad interests in the arts and things of that sort, and you can see that they come from the kind of home backgrounds that produce the kind of person we'd like to entrust our youngsters to. It's true at O.U., and it's true at a lot of the other schools in the state too ... Oh, naturally, I'd like to see a time come when all of our schools could be a little more selective than they are at the present time and thus raise the quality of the enrollees in the school of education. I'm not implying that the quality is low now, but I think it could be upgraded. Of course I'm awfully glad that they didn't have such restrictions in the days they let me get into public education.
MRS. PRICE—The School of Social Work is comparatively young among the professional schools on the campus, so the school itself really hasn't had the history that a lot of other schools [have had]. But I feel definitively that the graduates of the School of Social Work have been very important to the State of Oklahoma, because we do need graduates and trained personnel in the profession so much. To have this school available to people here in the state is very important; it enables many people to get training in social work while it would be impossible for them if they had to go to New York City or Chicago or some place farther away. I feel that the school here is very good and compares very favorably with the schools that are much older . . . I got all my training and my master's degree on the O.U. campus, and someone might say that I'm not in a position to say, but in my professional work I have met graduates of all schools in the United States, and I think our graduates compare very favorably. From what I hear about other schools, I think the standards here are good . . . The opportunities in Oklahoma [for practical experience] are very good. The students in the O.U. school can work with Central State Hospital and the medical school in Oklahoma City and the department of public welfare . . . The school is small in number, which gives the faculty an opportunity to know every student individually, and I think he does get individual help that he might not have in a larger school where the enrolment was larger or in a large city where the different fields were not so definitely defined as they are here in Oklahoma . . . When you have your field work in a setting where you are going to work as a professional person, this is an advantage . . . I think it would be beneficial if we could have more trained personnel to supervise in all areas . . . It would make more field work placements possible for the students . . . that would help the school. But of course . . . it doesn't help much to say we ought to have this and we ought to have that when everything you suggest just takes more money.
A new way to make electromagnets that are far more powerful for their size than any ever known before has been discovered by Bell Telephone Laboratories.

The future possibilities are exciting: for satellite communications, research work of many kinds, thermonuclear power, and uses and devices still to be created.

Just as with the transistor and Bell solar battery, also invented at Bell Laboratories, the eventual significance of the new electromagnet is hard to grasp in the early stages.

Here's how it works: At temperatures near absolute zero, certain kinds of wire (suited for electromagnets) become superconducting—that is, they offer no resistance to electric current. This is fine, and cuts down on power needs. The trouble is, a strong magnet itself destroys superconductivity.

Bell scientists, however, discovered a new superconducting wire compound of niobium and tin, and then found it would remain superconducting at low temperatures, even in strong magnetic fields. This will permit future magnets operating at low cost and using a fraction of the space taken by conventional electromagnets.

The Bell System is advancing scientific progress by publishing its findings and sharing its knowledge of superconducting materials with others. This is in accordance with our established policy on a wide variety of inventions and product designs.

Day after day, it is the time-proved combination of Bell Laboratories research, Western Electric manufacture, and telephone operations in one organization—with close teamwork between all three—that results in good service, low cost and constant improvements in the communications art benefiting all Americans.
Hurd, '52 soc. wk, have chosen the name Roberta. Their other children are Joel, 6, and Jeanie Sue, 4, the daughter born October 5 in Dallas, Texas.

MRS. LACHENMEYER—Yes, I do, only there doesn't seem to be enough of them . . . Some of the more glamorous positions are grabbing them off so fast—I mean television and radio. Many of them are going directly into public relations before they know enough about the news media; whereas most of the people in public relations spent some time on newspapers before going into public relations . . . As a whole the record shows O.U. journalism students are outstanding and in demand in other parts of the country, Washington, D.C., for example. Maybe that's why there doesn't seem to be enough of them around . . . But the problem is that they don't want to start with the small salary offered on a small newspaper, yet it's possible they may some day be owners or publishers of the paper.
