"Nordholz Under the Sea."

"Dear Mr. Beard:"

"You probably remember my being in your office last August. I was on my way to Germany then and I finally got here in the middle of September. After being shuttled up and down Germany last August, I was on my way to Germany then to the Army.

"I finally got here at Nordholz Air base with a Fighter Group. I was here only one day when I was told that Air Force Headquarters was pulling me out again. Today, three weeks later, I got my orders to report to a Negro Signal Battalion at Roth, Germany, near Nurnberg."

"This place Nordholz is without a doubt the Siberia of the E.T.O., the salt mines of the A.A.F. Here again is Brunsenhaven and Gather the North Sea, it is a place to drive a man to drink if there was anything to drink. The sun came out today and the base held an orientation lecture to bring some of the old timers up to date. I was so far back that I could hear ducks and geese swimming about in the tree tops. A big sea plane came in the other day as a result of a thousand feet above the field. We sent a sub up to fetch the crew to the mess hall.

"Well that's that for now. My new address is TBD on the envelope, will you see that Mrs. Mary Turner gets it so that she can start my copies of the "Soon" this way? We decided to delay mailing any of them until I get a permanent station."
