Service in High Places

Names in recent national and international news have found two University graduates—one from Dallas, Texas, and the other from Oklahoma—holding second place to no one.

The appointment of Dr. Henry G. Bennett, '24, president of Oklahoma A&M College, Stillwater, to the state department in Washington plus the service of George McGhee, '33, is, in a similar position are examples that they are men with wide backgrounds and are capable of doing many things well.

Described in a 1949 issue of Look Magazine as a “Texan with ideas and a heart as big as his state,” McGhee has been in the present state department chair since the spring of 1949.

Public service isn't a new undertaking for the young Texan-Oklahoman. A physics and geology student at the University, McGhee was elected a Rhodes scholar in 1933. He entered Queen’s College in the autumn of 1934 and received a doctor of philosophy degree in geophysics two years later—an early example of his more than average abilities.

Upon his return to the United States in 1936, he continued in the geophysics field and also operated in oil until 1941 when he joined the state department as a senior liaison officer on the War Production Board.

McGhee’s work was interrupted during World War II while he served as a naval lieutenant, receiving the Legion of Merit for co-ordinating bombing missions in the Asiatic Theater and three battle stars with his Asiatic Theater ribbon.

Following the war, it was back again to Washington. And with his return came an appointment as special assistant to the deputy assistant secretary of state for economic affairs. More recently came the appointment as deputy in the Greek aid program where he was co-ordinator of the Greek-Turkish aid program. At the present time he is in charge of Near East and African relations.

And proof positive that he is “capable of doing many things well”—and has done them well for some time—came in 1947 when the Dallas Junior Chamber of Commerce awarded him the Distinguished Service Award.

Probably better known to Oklahomans than McGhee, Bennett was appointed to his post recently. He is officially serving as technical cooperation administrator for President Truman's four-point program of aid to economically underdeveloped areas of the world. He is making a gallant effort to live up to the reputation of his well-known abilities by acting as both Washington and Oklahoma A&M. administrators, which, to coin a phrase, isn’t easy.

But a great number of the Oklahoma educator’s achievements haven’t been easy. As a result of years of planning and research, both at A&M. and elsewhere, he has become the most often listed among America’s top ten college presidents and holds seniority among Land-Grant College presidents for length of tenure of college presidency in America.

A member of Oklahoma’s Hall of Fame since 1938, Dr. Bennett is also listed in Who’s Who in America. He is a member of the Industrial Mobilization Committee of the Oklahoma Planning and Resources Board and Public Director of the Oklahoma Cotton Co-operative Association.

Bennett was the founder of the Oklahoma Flying Farmers Association which has now grown into the National Flying Farmers. Following the close of World War II, he was the only American agricultural college president selected to attend the International Foods and Agricultural Organization that met in Quebec, Canada.

More recently Bennett spent several weeks in Ethiopia consulting with Emperor Haile Selassie on expansion of that country’s agricultural training program.

An Early Indication

Arch T. Wheeler, Jr., '38 bs, president of the Kansas City Alumni Association, indicated at an early age that he was going to go places in the banking business. He started his career as soon as he was tall enough to reach the till in his family’s bank in Clinton, Oklahoma. And judging from his present height of six feet, four inches, physical growth has kept up with professional ambition.

Born at Pauls Valley, he moved to Clinton with his family in 1928, was graduated from Clinton high school in 1934, attended Southwestern College at Weatherford and was graduated from the University in 1938 with a BS degree in business.

While attending school at Weatherford, he was named the best individual debater in the junior college division of a tri-state tournament, competing with entrants from Texas, Kansas and Oklahoma. He majored in finance and accounting while attending the University and was a member of the senate forensic society, the University debate team and Phi Gamma Delta fraternity.

Sooner Portraits . . .

Following graduation from the University he joined the family bank in Clinton as assistant cashier. In 1941 he joined the National Bank examiners' force. Although he considered it an excellent experience, commercial banking was what really interested Arch. So he went to Wichita, Kansas, in 1945 as cashier of the Southwestern National Bank. In 1945 he moved to the Union National Bank in Kansas City, Missouri. And in 1947 he was elected vice president of the Union Bank, becoming one of the youngest men in the country to hold a senior officer position in a large metropolitan bank.

Arch Wheeler likes people and he has a tremendous amount of energy which directs toward promoting a better relationship between bankers and their customers. Since becoming head of the correspondent banking department of the Kansas City Bank, he has been busy calling on bankers and commercial customers throughout the southwest. This broad acquaintance has been another of the reasons why he has held many important positions in the city and state banking associations.

In 1943 he was married to the former Lucille Alice, '50ba. They make their home in Kansas City.

Arch is making plans for a large Kansas City Alumni luncheon this spring. He was informed by his predecessor, Richard T. (Dick) Pendleton, '26Law, that if the Sooners didn't have a football team during the 1950 season, he would be able to serve the luncheon on a bridge table. Football scores will raise the Sooner Alumni spirit, Arch may have to reserve Kansas City's Municipal Auditorium.
