Actually two young ladies were in this surveying class, photographed by Roy E. Heffner, probably in the 1930s. We chose this one, her helpful classmate and their instructor to test your Sooner memories. Drop a line if you recognize them; turn the page for the February identities.
Sooner playgoers of the 1933 season drew a surprising blank in tagging the romantic twosome in February's photograph from the Roy E. Heffner collection. Drama school director Reupl J. Jones finally came up with the name of the girl, Phyllis Seago, '34ba, now Mrs. Temple Bailey of Altus. Mrs. Bailey in turn identified her dashing companion as Bill Cope, '34ba.

The play, George Bernard Shaw's "Arms and the Man," set in 1885 Bulgaria, was presented at O.U. on May 12, 1933, with Cope as the hero playing opposite Lucille Tway, '35. Mrs. Bailey appeared in the role of the maid.

Mrs. Bailey, a Pi Beta Phi from DeSierfield, Illinois, during her college days, has lived in Altus almost continuously since graduation. She taught for a while in a junior college. Bailey attended the University of Texas. They have a daughter, Mary, 14.

Bill Cope also went to college teaching and was at Oklahoma College for Women at Chickasha in 1948.

NEW BOOKS:

From SOONERS and The University of Oklahoma Press

The University of Oklahoma Press outstripped the rest of the nation’s publishers in 1959 with four of the year’s top ten western books and a fifth among the runners-up. The annual selection is made by the Chicago Corral of the Westerners, a national organization dedicated to western history and literature.

On the “best” list were The Modocs and Their War by Keith A. Murray; Bill Sublette: Mountain Man by John E. Sunder; The Rampaging Herb: A Bibliography of Books and Pamphlets on Men and Events in the Cattle Industry by Ramon F. Adams, and Indians of the High Plains: From the Prehistoric Period to the Coming of Europeans by George E. Hyde.

The runner-up book was George Catlin: Episodes from Life Among the Indians and Last Rambles edited by Marvin C. Ross.

Melville’s Shorter Tales by Richard H. Fogle

University of Oklahoma Press

It may come as somewhat of a shock to the average reader to learn that the sum total of Herman Melville’s contribution to literature is not packed between the covers of the mammoth Moby Dick. The chronicler of the great white whale also authored a number of shorter tales of varying quality, generally ignored by both critic and public.

Richard Harter Fogle’s book does not include the tales themselves, as the title might suggest, but rather a brief synopsis of each with interpretation of the various facets of character and plot. Fortunately Fogle, who is chairman of Tulane’s English department, has restricted himself largely to explaining the tales as such and avoids bogging down in the guessing game of the outside influences which may have made the sea-loving author what he was.

To Melville devotees and/or enduring fans of Moby Dick, this new book is a valuable aid to understanding. The difficulty in deciding whether the original tales should be read before or after Fogle’s analysis—but at any rate, they should be read.

Edith Wharton: Convention and Morality in the Work of a Novelist by Marilyn Jones Hyde

University of Oklahoma Press

Edith Wharton’s nearly 50 years of literary output spans a gap (1891-1937) and as a consequence belongs to neither century. The purpose behind the novelist’s works has been a subject of controversy among critics—a controversy Marilyn Jones Hyde attempts to resolve in this 179-page study.

Mrs. Hyde, who is associated with the department of English at Georgia State College, explores Mrs. Wharton’s theory of conventional behavior as related to truth, wealth and tragedy, and concludes that for the novelist convention changes but truth does not.

Fortunately for the reader, Mrs. Hyde’s commentary is liberally sprinkled with quotations to facilitate reference and presents a well-annotated reconciliation of artistic purpose and artistic end.

The Splendid Misery by Jack Bell

Doubleday

Reading The Splendid Misery by Jack L. Bell, ’25journ, is a comfortable, entertaining experience rather like having a chat over coffee with a newsman in the know. Distinguished Newsman Bell, chief political writer for the Associated Press and chief of the AP Senate staff, uses knowledge gleaned from 22½ years spent covering the nation’s capitol to entertain, elucidate and instruct.

Published in February by Doubleday & Co., The Splendid Misery is sure to cause election-year comment. Bell details just how the office of the Presidency has been handled with particular emphasis on Mr. Presidents of the 20th century.

Republicans are likely moaning in anguish at Bell’s view of Eisenhowe’s political ineptitude, but the author insists the facts speak for themselves. His view of F.D.R. as a champion among Presidents is in large part based on Bell’s sincere belief that there has been “no epoch of true national advancement that did not have as its commanding figure a strong chief executive.”

All the familiar names of 20th century political life parade across Bell’s pages and his insights into the characters of Taft, Nixon, Sherman Adams and Harry Hopkins, to name but a few, are nothing less than fascinating.

A four-time AAU All-American, the Wichita team was just being organized when Lane was selected in the trials to play in the trials with them. The team selected in the trials will open practice August 1 in West Point, New York, and will arrive in Rome about 10 days before the August 25 games begin.

Lane's success in the country's toughest amateur basketball league followed his honor-filled collegiate career at O.U. While setting roundball scoring records, Lane also spent two seasons as defensive halfback for Coach Bud Wilkinson's Big Red before knee injuries and basketball conflicts forced him to give up the gridiron. He collected an O.U. track letter as a pole vaulter and was on the championship intramural swimming and softball teams.

In four years of Sooner basketball (1951-1955), Lane twice made the Helms Foundation All-America team and was All-Big Seven two seasons. Lane chalking up a record 1,180 points for Oklahoma, averaging 13.5 per game, with his big year coming in 1954-55 when he sank 19.6 points per game.

The Vickers Petroleum Company team in Wichita was just being organized to join the NIBL when Lane was graduated from O.U. in 1955. He has since been joined by Sooner forward Joe King, '58journ. In 1958, the year the Vickers tied for the championship, Lane had a 17.9 average. In his five seasons with the Wichita team, he has averaged over 14 points per game and his total points rank him in the top four all-time NIBL scorers.

Lane's performance in the 1959 national tourney, including 29 points against Phillips in the finals, placed him on the AAU All-America list. Retirement from active play with the Vickers is being forced by the increasing responsibilities that go with Lane's new position as manager of the Tires-Batteries-Accessories line for 350 Vickers service stations. Lane's job includes the introduction of the newly-acquired Goodyear T-B-A line to Vickers dealers and jobbers, the supplying of T-B-A items to these outlets and the coordination between Goodyear and Vickers.

Lane and his wife, the former Jan English of Altus, '52, will continue to make their home in Wichita. They have a son, Kevin, 6.

It is not surprising that for relaxation Lane turns to the many sports at which he excels. One of the outstanding amateur golfers in Wichita, he is also an expert swimmer and diver and has devoted much time in the summer to teaching swimming to the city's youngsters.

agin. It is his responsibility to see that the play goes without a hitch. Carol Gladstein must see that the wardrobe, designed by Mrs. Helen Lauterer, associate professor of drama, is pressed and ready for each performance.

Lighting is under Dave Spradling’s supervision while Eldon Hallum handles the sound.

All cast members work under the direction of Noile to set up the scenery before each performance and strike (dismantle) it after a show. This too was rehearsed before the exodus to the Orient and, working as closely together as show horses in harness, the troupe cut the time for setting up to 28 minutes and striking time to 10 minutes.

The job doesn’t end with striking, however, for the sets, costumes, props and lighting and sound equipment must all be packed away, ready for tomorrow’s move. Then the troupe members are likely to head for the officers’ or enlisted men’s clubs, perhaps for a variety show which the cast put together in between rehearsals in Norman.

Although entertaining servicemen is their goal, the cast members are under no illusion that entertainment is the only product of their tour. Perhaps even more important, they realize, is the impression they are leaving behind them in their travels.

In shopping and sightseeing tours, in personal contacts with natives of the countries they visit, these 14 young Americans and their director are leaving behind pictures of America and Americans.

It is almost a certainty that this picture is a good one for these young people bent all their energies and enthusiasm on the trip, many finishing 12 hours of classwork in eight weeks in order to go.

As for tact—this troupe has it.

The original script leans heavily for humor upon the inundation of the hapless Fullers by every variety of insect imaginable, with particular emphasis on those pesky Japanese beetles. Willing to take a giant step in tact to avoid even the suggestion of offense to Orientals, the troupe now has a beck of a time with those dratted Mexican beetles.
