After graduation many things about college have a way of fading into the past. But almost every alumnus has at least one vivid memory of a favorite professor—that one man or woman who had a hand in shaping his life. This month the Conversation Piece question initiated a search for such a memory. Replies to Who was your favorite professor during your days at the University (from taped telephone interviews) appear in the Roll Call.

Who was your favorite professor during your days at the University?

BOB LEE KIDD, JR., '36b, journalist
Poteau News

KIDD—My favorite professor was John H. Casey of the School of Journalism. The main reason is that I felt that he understood better than most the actual problems of the profession which I was about to enter. He was a pretty tough quiz master. I didn't make the best grades under Professor Casey, but I know that he had the interest of all his journalism students at heart, and in addition to doing a good job of teaching them, he also tried to place them in jobs after they were graduated. He did try to understand the problems that we would be facing when we stepped out into that old hard world and most of the advice he gave us, for me at least, proved to be true, and I used it effectively after I jumped into newspapering. It seems to me he was always happy about what he was teaching and he was always happy to see the advancements made by his students. He always seemed to keep in touch with them after they were out of school. . . .

I remember he encouraged me to take a job on a little weekly paper at Menard, Texas, between my junior and senior years . . . and I did, making $6 a week and room and board. I know that I gained valuable experience in those three months. If he hadn't encouraged me to take the job, I would probably have paddled away the summer and not learned what I did there.

Who was your favorite professor during your days at the University?

GEORGE LEE CAREY, SR., '24ba, druggist, Shawnee

CAREY—I remember [Dr. E. E.] Dale in history better than anyone else ... I just enjoyed his presentation and the things he had [to say] ... his approach and all ... [His quizzes] were adequate, and they weren't easy. I know that he always had me scared to death. He was a man I enjoyed and liked; he wasn't so tough that I resented his attitude ... I was more interested in math at the time; math was [the subject] I enjoyed most and got the most out of, but [Dr. Dale must] have made an impression on me, because I can remember him better than I can my math professors ... I thought he was an unusual personality ... not what you could term eccentric necessarily, but he was a little bit different from most of the professors I knew in his actions and attitudes ... He held my attention ... I hadn't even thought about him in years, except I wondered what had become of the old boy ... Of course I was just a very small cog in his great big machine, and he wouldn't even know that I ever existed ... not that he would have any reason to ... There was a Miss Mitchell in English who made me work harder than anyone else, I used to resent her a little, but I found out that I liked her after all, maybe because she did push me.
Capt. Brogden is a liaison officer in the quartermaster, Strategic Air Command, Offutt Air Force Base, Nebraska, which is an underground command post area 45 feet below the earth.

What impressed me about both of them was the fact that they were not only wonderful teachers, they were great humanitarians... they were interested in people. I think Reeves taught college algebra and analytical geometry and maybe one of the calculus courses that I had up there. Dean Felgar of the engineering college... taught engineering contracts, but I knew him through administrative work... Of course, I loved mathematics, so I don't remember how tough [their quizzes] were... They were representative quizzes... Dean Felgar probably [shaped our thoughts and gave us new ideas]. As I said, he was a great humanitarian and during the depression years when things were pretty tough, it was not so much a question of being efficient when the situation involved people with lots of problems... Both of them were very fine, practical men... They're both gone, you know, and... I don't remember anything but good about them.

Who was your favorite professor during your days at the University?

EDMUND G. McCURTAIN, ’35ba, ’36ma
chairman, department of sociology
University of Omaha (Nebraska)

McCurtain—Dr. Morris Wardell . . . I took a course in European history from him . . . He took much a personal interest in everybody, as I recall, and I always felt as though I knew him quite well. He was willing to talk to you any time anywhere . . . He gave essay examinations, and he always graded them himself, and I thought that was a tremendous thing to do—to grade 50 or 60 papers in a course like that and do it well and thoroughly. He had such a happy philosophy of life. His classes were always so interesting with all the jokes he was able to tell . . . I'd visit with him a lot and he would encourage me to do a lot of things that I would probably never have even thought about on my own. He was the one who encouraged me to go into college teaching. I don't believe I would have done it if he hadn't encouraged me to do so . . . The main thing I recall is simply his interest in the individual and his concern for you and wanting you to do the best you could with what you had. I think that's a tremendous asset that any college or university teacher should have, and he had it without any question. Whenever I went back to the campus while he was alive, I always went to see him. I enjoyed talking to him even after I'd been out of school for years. He'd always remember you.

SIGFRED E. FLOREN, JR., '41ba, '47Law attorney, Phillips Petroleum

FLOREN—I have some very fine recollections of Dr. Thornton...his enthusiasm and spontaneity and his particular interest in the subject of Oklahoma government prevailed his presentations...[Dr. Thornton] instilled many new thoughts in people, and he stimulated thinking about ideas that were not new...I was limited to about one year with him, so our relationship was not very close. In law school there would be Dr. Kulp and Dr. Merrill along with Professor Browder...I had several courses under Kulp, property and oil and gas, and I can't remember what other ones, but I can always remember the sparkling eye and the quick wit and the clear organization of his material, his incisive questions and the constructive criticism he always had of any presentations we would make in class...Dr. Kulp always held up the standards of ethics and conduct of lawyers as an important part of a lawyer's training and a law student's principles...I remember Dr. Merrill and his special interest in students after they left school, and there never failed to be a warm feeling when we encountered him in alumni meetings or occasionally in legal business...The mutual feeling of friendship and respect for one another is always evident in the attitude he takes toward his former students.
