Brains, beauty and business ability is the rare combination possessed by LeRoy McNeil, senior in the University school of journalism.

She is one of the three co-advertising managers of the Oklahoma Daily, and one of the few women journalism students who have risen to a top staff position on the student paper.

Last fall, three advertising managers were selected to manage the business end of the paper instead of electing a business manager. Miss McNeil and two men students were selected for the positions.

Recently, she was selected as Oklahoma's candidate for Queen of the Drake relays that will be held in May at Des Moines, Iowa. The outcome of the beauty contest will not be known until late in April.

Miss McNeil two years ago was included in the society section of the Sooner, yearbook, as one of the outstanding beauties on the campus.

As well as a good advertising salesman, she has identified herself on the editorial side of the daily and is a member of Theta Sigma Phi, honorary journalism fraternity for women.

Miss McNeil is a former Norman high school student and her family lives in Norman.

She plans to continue with work in the advertising field when she is graduated from the school of journalism in June.

She makes better than average grades, although her position as an advertising manager of the Oklahoma Daily requires that she spend from four to five hours a day attending to the business end of the paper.