Ted B. Westfall, '40bus, a Sooner accounting graduate holds new-won recognition as one of the foremost young men in U. S. government.

Westfall was recently named second-place winner of awards for the "Outstanding Young Government Man of the Year," according to notices received by his brother, Othel D. Westfall, '31bus, associate professor of accounting at the University.

The former Sooner student now lives in Arlington, Virginia, and is director of audits for the General Accounting office, congressional "watchdog" agency. Westfall was nominated for the award, made by the Washington Junior Chamber of Commerce, by U. S. Controller General Lindsay Warren, who cited Westfall for his part in development of the government's streamlined auditing program which, Warren said, will result in great savings in government.

Westfall played an important part in the General Accounting Office study of the old U. S. Maritime Commission that resulted in the congressional investigation. A committee wound up hearings by saying "That Mr. Westfall knew more about the Maritime Commission than any of its members or officials," Warren said in a recent interview with U. S. News.

After graduating from the University, Westfall worked for a public accounting firm in Houston, Texas. Commissioned in the navy, he worked as a navy cost inspector from 1944-1946, then went to the General Accounting Office. Before being leapfrogged to the new director of audits post, Westfall was an assistant director of GAO's corporating audits divisions.

In his present post, he is responsible for the overall planning, programming and correlation of GAO audits, including determination of the type of audit to be applied to each agency and the general pattern of the audits.

Since going to Washington, the Sooner alumnus has earned a bachelor of law degree by attending night classes at George Washington University's Law School. He is a certified public accountant, a member of the Texas Society of CPA's, a member of the American Institute of Accountants and of the District of Columbia bar.

For Oklahoma City. A tall, red-headed legislator from Oklahoma County's sixth district, was named Oklahoma City's "Outstanding Young Man for 1951." He is Norman E. Reynolds, '41ba, '47Law.

Reynolds was presented with the Junior Chamber of Commerce award by Governor Murray at the annual "Bosses luncheon" in Oklahoma City.

The 200-pound, 6-foot 5-inch legislator has piled up an activity list in keeping with his frame. In the legislative line, he served his second term in the state legislature in the early 1951 season. During the legislative session he sponsored bills to put controls on county commissioners, a legislative apportionment measure and an old-age pension lien and recovery act.

Reynolds was assistant to the co-chairman of the Heart Fund drive, served as a member of the general program committee for the YMCA, was a board member of the Chamber of Commerce, alumni advisor of the O.U. chapter of Sigma Alpha Epilson and was president of the Oklahoma City chapter of Phi Beta Kappa.

talking point now is stories about each other’s grandchildren.

All the physical plant people got together upon the occasion of the president’s open house last fall. Mrs. Cross invited everyone who had anything to do with remodeling the house. Possessed of an unusual voice herself, she assured Mrs. McNatt that the party would not be complete without her.

Letters accumulated over the years show that other high ranking University people appreciate Mrs. McNatt’s courteous manner and helpfulness. Hugh McDermott, ‘20 ba, coach of the “Boy Scats” cited her former duty in 1938.

W. H. Carson, engineering college dean, commended her for “the excellent manner in which she took care of the numerous long distance calls which came in during the Southwestern Gas Measurement Short Course in 1950.”

Thurman White, ’40 ma, extension service dean, in writing to Mr. Kraft about her stated, “As long as we have McNatt, you can have the dials.”

Every Christmas, her mail is loaded with cards from her “telephone friends.” The late Dr. Alma J. Neill never forgot to send her a card.

One of her treasured letters is written in a boyish scrawl and signed “Graham B.” (Johnson) whose tragic at Christmas last year grieved the entire campus.

But the one which brings sparkle to her eyes, over the tears underneath, says this, “I don’t believe I’d be bragging too much when I say I’ve got two of the best people for Mom and Dad that anyone ever had.”

“If I have any regrets,” said this woman who never forgets a voice, “It’s that I did not get to see Jimmy play in every basketball game in his life.”

accomplishments while at the University. He passed the state bar exam in 1942 with only two years of law school behind him. He made the second highest score in his law class. He was also elected to Phi Beta Kappa while a college junior.

Oklahoma City’s outstanding young man is a vestryman of St. Paul’s Episcopal church and is a delegate to the church’s state convention.
