Working Dean

"Left guard, did good work at that position in the Texas game, where he nearly ran away with one of the Texas players. He is a consistent player on offense and defense, and promises to be one of the best linemen Oklahoma has ever had. He is the heaviest man on the team and puts all of his weight into the line. He was the only first-year man to receive his 'O' this year.

The Yearbook prediction wasn't wrong, Bennie Owen says today that "Meach," as he was best known, was one of the best linemen and all-around good players that ever stepped on a gridiron. Bennie recalls his co-operative spirit, his sense of fair play, and especially "that good nose of his that got him in and out of more trouble on a golf course than any man I ever saw."

In recent years added duties have again forced curtailment of his recreational activities. He now spends most of his spare time in his yard and garden with or without a book and his pipe. He is exceptionally fond of home-grown roasting ears and friends say that he has raised some of the best in town.

Dean Meacham says, however, that his garden grows smaller every year, for one reason or another. This year his two children Ferrell, 16, and Martha, 13, have made a badminton court on part of it. "So it goes," he muses.

One would almost expect deliberate, thorough "Meach" to smoke a pipe. He does. He and his pipe are almost inseparable. As he sits in his office, he will take his leather tobacco pouch from his pocket, pull its zipper open, push the pipe's bowl into the three-dollar-per-pound Carl Henry, then lean back in his swivel chair to light it. He has only one or two pipes now, he says, but there was a time when he had a "pipe for every day in the week."

Dean Meacham is fond of books but he hasn't the time to read those he would like to have. Mrs. Meacham collects first editions of books printed by the University Press, and he does well, he says, to keep up with them in addition to the literature in his special field.

O. U. 's dean of the College of Arts and Sciences has a big job. It keeps Ed Meacham busy, but he grins and takes it in stride.
