True Love Hits Rough Stretch

One former University student, Collis Parker, '50bs, and his lovely young wife, the former Eunice Frost, will readily agree that true love never runs smooth.

Engaged some ten months ago, the Oklahoma City couple planned their wedding for the day following Parker's graduation from the University. It was to have been a "small family wedding" at the Oklahoma City First Baptist Church on Tuesday evening, August this year.

But for one hour that evening, the couple had their doubts that the ceremony would ever take place, because:

ONE—The church parlor, traditionally decorated for the occasion, turned out to be securely locked. And while the caretaker traveled unwittingly to another part of the state with the keys in his pocket, the best man exerted his best efforts to take the door off its hinges.

TWO—The minister didn't show up. He thought the ceremony was to take place at 6:30 rather than at 6:00 a.m.

THREE—The groom forgot the license and had to drive home to get it.

FOUR—The best man blew a fuse in the dark church auditorium so it couldn't substitute for the parlor after all.

FIVE—The happy couple, finally united in wedlock, forgot their suitcase and returned home for it in a sheepish anti-climax after a grand exit.

Finally, after much delay, the couple did leave for Colorado for their honeymoon.

When the General Electric Research Laboratory was established in 1900, it was the first industrial laboratory devoted to fundamental research. At that time E. H. Rice, Jr., then vice president of General Electric, said: "Although our engineers have always been with every facility for the designs and improvements liberally supplied of new and original development of existing Standards, it has been deemed wise during the past year to establish a laboratory to be devoted exclusively to original research. It is hoped by this means that many profitable fields may be discovered."

Many profitable fields were discovered—profitable not only for General Electric but also for industry, the American public, and the world.

A half century ago the industrial experimental laboratory was itself an experiment. This month it begins its second half century with the dedication of a new building, greatly augmenting the facilities it offers to the advancement of man's knowledge.
