Kathy asked Bill for a date Saturday night. No, she wasn’t being forward; it was Now or Never Week and the girls were supposed to exchange places with the men. Kathy had been planning the date all week. She and the places with the men. Kathy and the other girls were finding that it wasn’t so easy to get a car, organize a party or decide how to show their dates a good time.

Finally, Saturday arrived and Kathy went over to Bill’s house to pick him up. She felt a little embarrassed as she peeked in the door to see if any other girls were there. Seeing two other girls waiting on their dates, she bracketed and walked in.

Bill was playing his role all the way. He waited upstairs for a while after being told that his date had arrived. After all, this was a good opportunity to show her how it feels when he has to wait for ten minutes of final primping. Now it was Bill’s turn to be embarrassed. Kathy dutifully helped him on with his coat and opened the door for him. All the other boys in the house gathered around to laugh at his awkwardness.

The silliness of the thing was worthwhile to Bill, however. She was paying all the checks. Kathy took him to dinner and stumbled through the ordering; took him to the movie and forgot to buy the tickets. Then, she took him home, exhausted from all the responsibility.

Although the men were having an easy week on their wallets, the girls were getting most of the breaks. This was the girl’s chance to show that boy in her English class that she really liked him and would like to date him. Of course, girls don’t really need to ask boys for dates—if they are smart. The proper approach, a smile, the right words or a meaningful glance can usually turn the trick. But some guys can’t take a hint.

The men got an education. They learned what it is like to sit by the telephone, waiting for a call from a girl asking for a date. And the unlucky ones found out how exciting a Saturday night at home is. It was fun for a while, but everyone was relieved when Now or Never Week (March 4-11) was over and things were back to normal.

The 1955 Sooner Scandals, March 10-11, were acclaimed by many as the “best ever.” The organized houses had been practicing for weeks before their performances donned costumes and painted for the O.U. extravaganza. Several of the acts approached professional perfection, with intricate dances and excellent music.

Delta Delta Delta sorority was top winner in the women’s division with an act entitled “Mother Goose Rhymes in Modern Times.” Winner of the men’s division was Alpha Tau Omega fraternity. The ATO “Interlude of Magic” included baton-twirling, juggeling, a clown routine and a disappearing rabbit.

Kappa Sigma fraternity and Gwen Massengale, Woodward, won the specialty act division with their “Up-to-Date Grand Opera.” George Chaney, Oklahoma City, and Valjean Johns, Shattuck, were judged winners of the small acts division for their duo-piano performance. And winner of the single act division was Gwen Drennan, Oklahoma City. Miss Drennan did a three-part ballet solo.

The 1955 Letzeiser medals were presented by President Cross at the annual BMOC-BWOC banquet held March 1. The Letzeiser medals are awarded to graduating seniors with outstanding records in scholarship, extracurricular activities and service to the University.

Mrs. Marjorie Peterson Mosburg, Ponca City, and William J. Kennedy, Norman, were awarded the gold medals. Silver medals were awarded to Joan Wakefield, Tulsa, and Jack Jennings, Lookeba. Ann West Elms, Antlers, and Albert J. Alschuler, Lubbock, Texas, were bronze award winners.
