R. J. CANNING, Business Training Course. General Electric’s business training program offers the college graduate the opportunity to build a career in the field of accounting, finance, and business management in one of the most diversified companies in the country. Beginning in 1919, more than 3,000 students have participated in the program—one of the first training programs in business to be offered by industry. The program’s principal objective is to develop men well qualified in accounting and related business studies, men who can become administrative leaders in the financial and general business activities of the company.

Selection of men for the program is based on interviews, reviews of students’ records, and discussions with placement directors and faculty members. Selection is not limited solely to accounting and business administration majors. A large number of men in the program are liberal arts graduates, engineers, and men with other technical training.

When a man enters the program he is assigned a full-time office position in accounting or other financial work and enrolled in the formal evening education program. This planned classroom work is a most important phase of the program. The material presented is carefully selected and well integrated for the development of an adequate knowledge of accounting and business theory, procedures and policies followed by the company, acceptable accounting and business practices of the modern economic enterprise, and as a supplement to the practical experience provided by the job assignment.

In general, the program trainee is considered in training for three years during which time advancements are made to more responsible types of accounting work. After completing academic training, the trainee’s progress and interests are re-examined. If he has demonstrated an aptitude for financial work, he is considered for transfer to the staff of traveling auditors or to an accounting and financial supervisory position. From here his advancement opportunities lie in financial administrative positions throughout the company. Trainees showing an interest and aptitude for work other than financial, such as sales, purchasing, community relations, publicity, etc., are at this time considered for placement in these fields.

Today, graduates of the program hold responsible positions throughout the entire organization. Management positions in the accounting and financial field throughout the company, such as comptroller, treasurer, finance managers, secretaries, and others, are held in large part by graduates of the course. Men who have transferred to other fields after experience in financial work include public relations executives, managers of operating divisions and departments, presidents of affiliated companies, officials in personnel, employee relations and production divisions, and executives in many other company activities.

This partial list of positions now filled by former business training men is indicative of the career preparation offered by the business training program, and of the opportunities that exist for qualified men interested in beginning their careers in accounting and financial work.

The Sky's No Limit.

The means of nuclear transmutation will surely follow. A three-dimensional scanner will analyze the atomic structure of the object to be copied, then reproduce it out of whatever raw material comes to hand.

A space ship equipped with such a unit could manufacture anything needed from those elements most plentiful on a planet. By coupling the reproducer unit to...

Man: 1975

Meet Mr. 1975. (Or maybe it's 2000, or 2050.)

Whatever the date, he looks just about like we do.

Inside, though, something's happened to him. Sum it up by saying that his world has, paradoxically, made him more individualistic. Limitless power and the transmutational duplicator give him material security—and then threw on reverse English to prove just how empty security can be. Because it also took the sparkle out of reward as an incentive. Acquisition lost its glamour. Our Hero found that interest, the intrinsic subjective lure of a given task, was the only motivation worth a hoot for the long pull.

So he took off on a couple of new tangents.

One was curiosity; the other craftsmanship.

Craftsmanship gave him originality, pride of creation, in a day when push buttons had stripped copies of everything but utility.

Curiosity drove him into the laboratory and beneath the sea and out onto the space ways in an eager search for new intellectual and physical experience.

He may end up almost anywhere.
