How an Alumni College Works

remains, however, much that the University should do for its graduates, and this field of service has been intensively cultivated only in the last ten years. The alumni should be assisted in continuing their education. College training is not worth its cost unless the recipient can build upon it with materials more substantial than bridge, golf, popular literature, or specialized knowledge in a business, trade, or profession. The ideal alumnus grows in wisdom. He devotes his life to an effort to become a cultivated person. He has a right to expect assistance in this growth from his University, as the highest school in the system.

This briefly is an account of the program at the University of Michigan. I well realize that we are doing many of these things at the University of Oklahoma. It seems to me that Dr. Bizzell's proposal of an Alumni College will serve to emphasize the importance of a program of this type and to increase the scope of its activities. We must remember that the University of Oklahoma is a state institution financed by public funds. The problems of the state of Oklahoma and its people are, and should be, the problems of the University of Oklahoma, and it is one of the fundamental duties of the University to help the state and its people to better meet and solve these problems.

In submitting this information about the program carried on at the University of Michigan I do not feel that it is a matter of "keeping up with the Joneses" for we all realize there is far too much competition in the field of education already; but it is a matter of a state university broadening the scope of its services and helping its alumni as well as other adults to keep abreast with the times.

As to the need of a building, I might say that the University of Michigan was fortunate in having the Rackham Building available. However, because of the elaborate building program that has been carried on there, this was not really necessary.

At the University of Oklahoma, crowded as we are for building space as well as other facilities, it seems to me that if a program of this type is to be undertaken wholeheartedly, one of the initial moves should be the construction of a building to be known as the Alumni College. Of course this could be a separate building but it would appear that probably the preferable thing to do would be to construct it either as a separate building attached to the Union Building, or as a wing of the Union Building. This would enable us to avoid any duplication of facilities. Herein could be housed the offices of the various extension services as well as the facilities for conducting short courses, conference, institutes and so on. This would become the center for the alumni-adult education program of the University.

I feel that this proposal for an Alumni College is one that is really worthy of the support of the Alumni Association. I do not dare say that the University has yet undertaken by the Association holds more prospects of future service and benefit to Oklahoma and its people than this. And we must remember that whatever services and benefits the State of Oklahoma will in turn benefit the University of Oklahoma.

PELE’S HAIR

The project already under way promised invaluable aid in time.

In December of the preceding year the Survey had secured approval for the project. It was known as the State Mineral Survey. Its object was to gather just as much information as possible about the mineral resources of the state. Approximately six hundred persons were employed, of whom some ten per cent were non-relief, technical supervisors, geologists and engineers. They worked in every county of the state gathering ten to thirty pound samples of every type of rock present in an area.

Samples poured into Norman. Six chemists, also a part of the project, analyzed each, with the result that the Survey had a file of between 3,000 and 4,000 analyses of state rock when the work was completed in July, 1937.

It was a large undertaking and required virtually all of the time of the Survey staff. They were still giving what attention they could to the problem of rock wool—but that was very little. Finally, with the W. P. A. mineral survey finished, the green light was on. F. C. Wood, the mining and metallurgical engineer of the Survey who had accompanied Director Dott to Illinois, went to work on rock wool.

He went to the file of the newly accumulated analyses of rock deposits over the state and selected the rocks with the approximate chemical composition shown to be necessary by the Illinois report. A twenty to thirty per cent carbon dioxide content was the principal characteristic.
