Fraternities Lamooned 25 Years Ago

The class of 1924 will remember the lampooning of the fraternities and sororities received in the Sooner Yearbook of that year. Giving a comic history of each social order, they said of Beta Theta Pi: "One of the so-called Miami Triad the Woodwinds prove that the average college violinists will try anything. Since 1859 the Betas have infected many of the more careless American colleges and universities. Perhaps no fraternity has impressed the country as much as this organization, judging from its membership."

The Sigma Nu boys also came in for some of the broad satire. Their fraternity's history was explained thusly, "This order was started in the back of a saloon by a group of drunken cadets with the premise 'This order was started in the back of a saloon by a group of drunken cadets with the express purpose of precaution. . . . They have successfully lived down their reputation for wildness largely because they don't get to date any more, and girls can't be mean with themselves.'"

Aggies Congratulated

20 Years Ago

The year of the stock market panic must have affected the mental mechanisms of the Sooner Magazine editor. He wrote an editorial entitled "Our congratulations to the Oklahoma Aggies!!" The title is his, the exclamation point ours. In this day and time praising an Aggie is nothing short of heresy. So we hereby disavow any journalistic bonds with the 1929 Sooner editor.

To even the score on the A&M controversy we reprint an article appearing in the January 1929 Sooner Magazine to show just what pantywaists the Aggies really are:

"Because of the October heat, the Missouri Valley Athletic conference has granted permission to Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College to hold its football games at Stillwater during that month at night." Perhaps the whole sport is a little too strenuous for the boys—they probably require air-conditioned milking rooms today.

The magazine of that year reprinted an article from the Tulsa World telling of an embarrassing incident which occurred to the newly-weds T. H. Williams, '29Law, and Mrs. Williams, the former Clara A. Kramer, '26. It seems that the 1929 candidate for the world's meanest man had stolen the clothes that the couple had carried on their honeymoon. Modesty forced them to cut their honeymoon short.

Pans, still believed in 1929 to be a form of humor, were much in evidence in the Sooner Magazine. A classic one was titled "For alumni con-

Manley May Move Mountains

"I was sure glad when you got that first team out of there, but say! Who in the heck was that big, rough left tackle that came in with your sec-tond team?"

Mel Sheehan, Missouri's big right end whom the Oklahoma team named on their all-opponents eleven in 1948, was talking to Sooner players after the Tiger-Sooner battle at Norman last year.

The player Sheehan meant was Leon Manley of Hollis, Oklahoma's second team left tackle who played behind Homer Paine. Now that Paine, three-year starter, is out of the lineup, Manley is the man.

"He's a popular choice with the Sooner players. They call him "One Round," because of his hustle and determination. While he isn't as neat a blocker as Wade Walker, Oklahoma right tackle, Manley blocks so aggressively that he gets the job done okay. Fastest tackle on the squad, he's a good downfield blocker, too."

A quiet, good-natured 205-pound boy with an unruly shock of blond hair, Manley likes of-

"The most fun in football is when we've got a split-T drive under way, and are makin' yards down the field," he says.

Manley enjoys the strategy of split-T line play. On handoffs straight ahead, the charging Sooner halfback watches the blocking develop in front of him instead of keeping his eye on the ball. It's up to the quarterback to put the ball on the halfback's hip. The halfback feels for the ball, and clutches it on his way to the hole, but he never takes his eye off the hole.

"I like to block in the direction the opponent cuts," Manley asserts. "If he charges you, you take him head on. If he wants to spread you out, you block the other way. Makes no difference what the guy in front of you does, he's always wrong."

Manley says the left halfback on his side of the line, fellows like Lindell Pearson, the shooting 190-pounder, and Buddy Jones, the 154-pound Holdenville Flitter, are good at helping him set up blocks. "If I'm to take my man out, Pearson and Jones take out to help widen him, then cut in," Manley explains.

Al Weiner, strapping North Carolina wing whom the Sooners encountered in the 1949 Sugar Bowl game, is the best end Manley ever faced. Weiner can "go through the middle and get the ball," Manley says. "He's not particularly big, but he's got more quickness than most."

"He got out well in spite of his great size," Manley says. "On offense, he lined up on first one side of the line, then the other. When we knew a pass was coming, we doubled-teamed him, trying to hold him up. On our side of the line, Jim Owen and Paine took him, then Ken Tipps and I. On the other side Wade Walker and Bobby Goad had him, then when our second team came in, Nute Trotter and Frankie Anderson. On the first play of the game, Walker and Goad held him up and that was why Owens tackled Rodgers for a loss. But Weiner was good."

Manley says Texas' line of last year was the best he ever played against, with North Carolina second. He thoroughly enjoyed playing behind Homer Paine, superb Sooner left tackle, but complains "When I got in, Homer usually had the opposition end all softened up." He says Jim Weatherall, his 220-pound sophomore understudy from Hooker, is a center on downfield blocking. And Wade Walker, Sooner right tackle, is his blocking model.

Manley has played virtually every position in football. At Hollis, his home town, he was three years a 100-pound single wing blocking back on the junior high team, then played tackle and guard in high school. Joe Bailey Metcalf and Dick Highfill were his coaches.

After a tour in the navy, Manley came to Okla-
