COMING SOON!

OG&E is participating with 16 other investor-owned electric utilities in an atomic power experiment aimed at producing dependable, low-cost electric power from atomic fuels. This project, known as SEFOR (Southwest Experimental Fast Oxide Reactor), will build a plant north of Ft. Smith, Arkansas, to be used primarily for research and observation of the "fast breeder reactor." In addition to the feasibility studies, SEFOR will provide an excellent opportunity for college engineering students to study its advanced atomic reactor.

This research project exemplifies the continuing efforts of OG&E and the Electric Industry to provide an abundance of low-cost electric power for tomorrow's needs.
