Magazine compliments Phillips

Time Magazine, looking southwest to Oklahoma, recently printed a colorful article on the chief occupant of the State Capitol, Governor Leon C. Phillips, '16 law. The state auditor's report had been released announcing that the Governor had cut state expenditures $1,570,000 since last July 1, and a representative of his had gone to Ohio to demand that Oklahoma's "Jean Val Jean," Carlton B. Chilton, be extradited. So "Big Red," the name given him by Time, was in the news.

"Oklahoma breeds big, tough, silent men with hearts of gold—some good, some bad, some eccentric—but always men," the article begins. "In Oklahoma's heritage of oil, Indians, covered wagons, milling and mooing. Not once in his first year in the saddle was he forced to demand that Oklahoma's "Jean Val Jean," Carlton B. Chilton, be extradited. So "Big Red," the name given him by Time, was in the news."

"No sissy is Governor Leon C. Phillips, 49 years old... who has amassed more legal powers than any Oklahoma governor before him. He rides hard on the legislature, shoos strays back in line, keeps them milling and mooing. Not once in his first year in the saddle has he had to head off a stampede."

"Time" credited him with this achievements: cut state expenses by 2,000; reorganized the highway department and wiped out a $5,000,000 deficit in a few months with cold cash; cut common school appropriations from $12,800,000 a year to $11,500,000; virtually canceled a building program including a $1,000,000 auxiliary state office building; and enacted his entire program with no new taxes.
