The Regents announced the appointment of Dr. John Y. Battenfield, '37med, to be released from the Army medical corps, as head of the University’s medical service. Dr. Battenfield, holding the rank of captain, took part in the invasion of Europe and was wounded during the Battle of the Bulge. Before entering the Army, he was associated with the State Health Department.

Other appointments announced by the Board were as follows: Clifford M. Baumbach, assistant professor of business management; Alexander N. Saunders, assistant professor of English; Noel E. Vaughan, assistant director of family life education; O. W. Rush, assistant to the counselor of men; Mrs. Thelma Margaret Dyke, clerical stenographer in the office of the counselor of women; Phyllis Attenhofer, assistant to the counselor of women; Margaret Fisher, assistant to the counselor of women.

Virginia Acher, residence counselor in the residential halls for women.

William R. Eldridge, studio engineer at radio station WNAD.

Jack A. Agency, announcer and editor at WNAD.

Brucen C. Robbins, production manager at WNAD.

Mrs. Evelta V. Hughes, clerical secretary in the Placement Office.

William T. Lester, floor man in the University Press.

Mrs. Marjory G. Bradley, roll clerk in the Registry Office.

Mrs. Linda Mac Walden, secretary in the Guidance Center.

A. W. Hamon, caretaker of R.O.T.C. property.

The following resignations were accepted: Paul Eldridge, '36ba, associate professor of English, for a position at the University of Nevada in Reno.

Kenneth Benzon, Bookman in the University Press.

Mrs. Rebecca Miller, assistant in the counselor of women’s office.

Dixie Potter Chemnutt, traffic manager of WNAD.

Helen Kemph, clerical secretary in the office of admissions.

Mabel M. Lord, clerical stenographer in the department of library science.

Mrs. Marjorie Baum, secretary in the Placement Service.

Mrs. Ray E. Goedeken, stenographer in the School of Home Economics.

Marvin Killman, linotype operator in the University Press.

Leaves of absence were granted to Dr. Stuart R. Tompkins, assistant professor of history, for a leave of absence to study under a Rockefeller grant.

Dr. Dale also spent a few days doing research in the Southwest Museum in Los Angeles, and he will probably spend another summer in the Huntington library and plans to complete the two books by writing within a year. His study in the Huntington library concerns federal relations with the Indians of the Southwest since 1888, when California and the extreme southwestern states were secured by the United States following the Mexican War.

The second book concerns the cultural contributions of the Indians of Oklahoma to the state and nation. Dr. Dale did extensive research on the subject during the spring semester while on leave of absence to study under a Rockefeller grant.

Dr. Dale also spent a few days doing research in the Southwest Museum in Los Angeles, and he will probably spend another summer in the Huntington library and plans to complete the two books by writing within a year. His study in the Huntington library concerns federal relations with the Indians of the Southwest since 1888, when California and the extreme southwestern states were secured by the United States following the Mexican War.

The second book concerns the cultural contributions of the Indians of Oklahoma to the state and nation. Dr. Dale did extensive research on the subject during the spring semester while on leave of absence to study under a Rockefeller grant.

Dr. Dale also spent a few days doing research in the Southwest Museum in Los Angeles, and he will probably spend another summer in the Huntington library and plans to complete the two books by writing within a year. His study in the Huntington library concerns federal relations with the Indians of the Southwest since 1888, when California and the extreme southwestern states were secured by the United States following the Mexican War.

The second book concerns the cultural contributions of the Indians of Oklahoma to the state and nation. Dr. Dale did extensive research on the subject during the spring semester while on leave of absence to study under a Rockefeller grant.

Dr. Dale also spent a few days doing research in the Southwest Museum in Los Angeles, and he will probably spend another summer in the Huntington library and plans to complete the two books by writing within a year. His study in the Huntington library concerns federal relations with the Indians of the Southwest since 1888, when California and the extreme southwestern states were secured by the United States following the Mexican War.

The second book concerns the cultural contributions of the Indians of Oklahoma to the state and nation. Dr. Dale did extensive research on the subject during the spring semester while on leave of absence to study under a Rockefeller grant.

Dr. Dale also spent a few days doing research in the Southwest Museum in Los Angeles, and he will probably spend another summer in the Huntington library and plans to complete the two books by writing within a year. His study in the Huntington library concerns federal relations with the Indians of the Southwest since 1888, when California and the extreme southwestern states were secured by the United States following the Mexican War.

The second book concerns the cultural contributions of the Indians of Oklahoma to the state and nation. Dr. Dale did extensive research on the subject during the spring semester while on leave of absence to study under a Rockefeller grant.

Dr. Dale also spent a few days doing research in the Southwest Museum in Los Angeles, and he will probably spend another summer in the Huntington library and plans to complete the two books by writing within a year. His study in the Huntington library concerns federal relations with the Indians of the Southwest since 1888, when California and the extreme southwestern states were secured by the United States following the Mexican War.

The second book concerns the cultural contributions of the Indians of Oklahoma to the state and nation. Dr. Dale did extensive research on the subject during the spring semester while on leave of absence to study under a Rockefeller grant.

Dr. Dale also spent a few days doing research in the Southwest Museum in Los Angeles, and he will probably spend another summer in the Huntington library and plans to complete the two books by writing within a year. His study in the Huntington library concerns federal relations with the Indians of the Southwest since 1888, when California and the extreme southwestern states were secured by the United States following the Mexican War.

The second book concerns the cultural contributions of the Indians of Oklahoma to the state and nation. Dr. Dale did extensive research on the subject during the spring semester while on leave of absence to study under a Rockefeller grant.

Dr. Dale also spent a few days doing research in the Southwest Museum in Los Angeles, and he will probably spend another summer in the Huntington library and plans to complete the two books by writing within a year. His study in the Huntington library concerns federal relations with the Indians of the Southwest since 1888, when California and the extreme southwestern states were secured by the United States following the Mexican War.

The second book concerns the cultural contributions of the Indians of Oklahoma to the state and nation. Dr. Dale did extensive research on the subject during the spring semester while on leave of absence to study under a Rockefeller grant.

Dr. Dale also spent a few days doing research in the Southwest Museum in Los Angeles, and he will probably spend another summer in the Huntington library and plans to complete the two books by writing within a year. His study in the Huntington library concerns federal relations with the Indians of the Southwest since 1888, when California and the extreme southwestern states were secured by the United States following the Mexican War.

The second book concerns the cultural contributions of the Indians of Oklahoma to the state and nation. Dr. Dale did extensive research on the subject during the spring semester while on leave of absence to study under a Rockefeller grant.