1941 after graduating from Shawnee High School, he was elected president of his fraternity, Phi Delta Theta, and from 1947-49 he played on the golf team. In his last year of law school, 1949, he helped edit the Oklahoma Law Review and was accepted to membership in COIF, honorary legal fraternity.

His school was interrupted in 1943 when he was drafted. He was placed in the infantry but beat the rap by going to officer candidate school, coming out a second lieutenant in the Transport Service. While at the Port of Embarkation in Los Angeles, he met his wife in a setting considered too unbelievable by most fiction writers, Owen was the injured service man, and Agnes the comforting nurse.

As Panner told it, swinging around in his chair and putting his feet on an open desk drawer, "I went to the hospital with a wisdom tooth broken off in my jaw. They were giving me penicillin shots but I couldn't talk. My jaw remained swollen shut."

"Everybody acted like I was going to die and I thought I would. There was this nurse there and so I started writing notes cussing the doctors and creating four colors of trouble. They said I was the worst patient ever rolled into that hospital, and I suppose I was. Six weeks after I began firing the notes we were married." That was in February, 1946. In September he and his wife returned to O. U. and Owen enrolled in law school.

In 1949 when graduation seemed close enough, Owen began writing again. This time he sent out 300 letters over the country explaining that he wanted to practice. "What I was trying to get around was serving six years as an apprentice with some law firm before I could begin trying cases."

With some favorable replies, Owen drove...
