The old Boyd Field has been near-by towns are commuting. This is due to the fact that students living in Chickasha, Oklahoma, Shawnee and other nearby towns are commuting. The old Boyd Field has been converted into a parking lot and the aspect of that part of the campus school days is quite metropolitan.

There is only one consolation about the failure of the show produced by the men's council and that is that the public this year may not be called upon to pay for the keys which the council members give themselves.

The value of the reorganized University of Oklahoma Association was never better demonstrated than at Homecoming this year. At no time since I can recall has there been such a widespread return of alumni from many states. More alumni registered than ever before.

It takes time to create a solid alumni organization. Three years of work, often discouraging, are bearing fruit now. There are many things to account for this fact, the increasing age of the university and, accordingly, the increasing number of former students, the successful appeals of President Bizzell for loyalty and union, and the consistent drive of Secretary Frank Cleckler in the face of apathy.

Officers in the Association have worked hard. They have met many difficult problems during the past two years and time has proved in each case their decisions were wise ones. Little publicity has been given to the various actions of the board and to the sacrifice in time which many of the busiest men in the state have made, since the board prefers its rewards in results rather than ballyhoo.

The annual pre-Homecoming dinner and dance given by the Oklahoma City Alumni club was the most successful yet of these entertainments. The pleasure of seeing again your classmates of university days is a potent reminder of just how much Norman and the university have given to the fullness of our present lives.

It has become a habit among many alumni to make their first call at Norman at Secretary Cleckler's office. This year saw many faces which called there last year and the year before. The goal of that office now is to have every former student come in for a visit during his trip to Norman. You'll be surprised at the pleasure you experience when you get the alumni habit.
