Deaths in Service

General Devine wrote that he and Major Buchanan were driving up to the front lines to coordinate artillery fire with the ground in the area of Gourbesville, in the Cherbourg peninsula, when their jeep ran into a roadblock and they were fired upon by a group of Germans.

General Devine, Major Buchanan and the driver, Corporal Bender, jumped from the jeep to take cover, the General and the Corporal going into one side of the road, and Major Buchanan the other.

"I saw of Buck he was going over the hedge, his tommy gun in his hand," General Devine wrote. "The Germans opened up on us with machine guns, grenades and mortars. For some time Buck and I were isolated back, while I fired from my side with a pistol, the only weapon I had. After a short while all firing ceased. On my side of the road I rolled away along the hedge, hoping that Buck and Bender were doing the same. When the Germans rushed the car I was far enough away to jump the hedge and get away by crawling."

General Devine returned to his own lines and sent a search party out to find the two men, but in vain. The attack on Gourbesville that night was successful, and the next morning General Devine led another searching party which found Major Buchanan's body not 30 feet from where he had jumped the hedge. Corporal Bender was found seriously injured, but is now recovering in a hospital in England.
